Dean: All that I can say is that Watergate is not unique to the United States alone. Similar events recently occurred in Germany and Japan.

Q: Despite all the evil qualities of Richard Nixon, does the man possess any redeeming qualities whatsoever?

Dean: I'm glad you asked that question since many people expect me to publicly decry Nixon the man. As sure as Watergate clouded the fact that he had good qualities too, so does every other man have within him the potential to do both good and evil. Perhaps he was best likable and approachable on a one-to-one basis.

In concluding his evening at Carleton University, Dean said that we as Canadians - "witnesses from afar" - should have a good perspective on Watergate and its related events. He left by saying, "Ambition is not a bad word. A lot of things wouldn't happen in this life without ambition. Keep your head and don't be afraid to be ambitious, but don't let it run your life too."

Drama Guild celebrates 75th consecutive season

A.R. (Sandy) Webster, actor and writer for Canadian radio, stage and television, will be the guest speaker at a banquet on March 1 marking the 75th consecutive season for the Queen's Drama Guild. Mr. Webster, a Queen's graduate, was active in the Drama Guild during his student days (1945-49) and will speak on the present state of professional theatre and the actor in Canada, as compared with earlier years.

President of Actors' Equity Association.

Another highlight of the 75th anniversary weekend, February 28 - March 1, will be the performance by past members of the Guild of scenes from plays spanning the 1940's, '50's, and '60's - Othello, The Merchant of Venice, The Glass Menagerie, A Question of Fact, and Hamlet. Guild alumni are busy practising their individual roles at home in Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, series, broadcast weekly this term on CFRC. Two radio plays written, directed and acted by students, will recreate the style of the great radio decade, the '40's, and will be broadcast live from Convocation Hall on February 28 as part of the anniversary program with the "old grads" as a participating audience.

Student theatre buffs, headed by Guild President David Fanstone and anniversary chairman Morrie Sinkins, will also present a display of costumes, props, newspaper clippings, programmes and pictures spanning the Guild's history since its establishment in 1901 as Queen's Dramatic Club.

Among the graduates expected to return to campus for the weekend celebrations are several who became professional actors, broadcasters or writers - Lorne Greene, Larry Paley, Bernard Trotter, Munroe Scott and Sandy Webster. Kingston broadcasters Terry French and John Bermingham and Theatre Five's Gordon Robertson are also among the Drama Guild's "graduates".

Most recently seen as Sir John A. Macdonald in Jean Gascon's production of Riel (National Arts Centre, Ottawa) and in CBC's National Dream, Sandy Webster is also involved in the off-stage side of his profession. He is a member of the Professional Council of the National Theatre School, Montreal, and is Canadian Vice-Oshawa and Kingston, and will get together for rehearsals under the direction of Michael Humphries, Toronto, when they meet on campus.

The present Drama Guild members—students from almost every faculty at Queen's—are marking the anniversary with a Guild Hall Mystery Theatre

Special selection of choral singers

Queen's Chamber Singers, under their director Rudolf Schnitzler, are to give a performance of choral music on Saturday, 1 March. The concert will take place in Sydenham Street United Church at 8:30 p.m. and admission is free.

Queen's Chamber Singers is one of five ensembles in Queen's Music Department. It consists of a group of twenty-seven singers who have been specially selected for their quality of voice. For this performance, Dr. F.R.C. Clarke, is the guest organist.

Four composers are represented on the program. Charles Edward Ives, whose centennial anniversary was celebrated last year; Igor Stravinsky by his Ave Maria and Pater Noster (Latin Version); Canada's "dean of composers" Healey Willan; and last, but by no means least, Benjamin Britten. Britten is one of the very few composers and musicians who have been honoured by the bestowal of one of Britain's highest awards, the Order of Merit. His work, "Rejoice in the Lamb", will feature soloists Karen Skidmore, soprano; Gail Hohner, contralto; Craig Tompkins, tenor; and Norm Nurni, bass.

Jong's woman: crude but sensitive

Fear of Flying by Erica Jong

by Peter Haworth

Erica Jong has caused a stir. Her first novel, Fear of Flying has received high praise from some critics, and has upset many other readers. The issue is Jong's daring statement about what a woman is. In her novel, she freely exposes the deepest urges and fears of a woman: her strong sexual desires and her unquenchable thirst for the right man. Jong has stripped herself so completely of all appearances and pretensions, that one wonders what she intends for an encore.

Fear of Flying follows the adventures of Isadora Wing, after meeting an attractive, but rather impotent English psychiatrist, and builds up to her choice between her husband and this intriguing new lover. Isadora has married before, and she describes her childhood memories and previous affairs in extended flashbacks. Isadora is also a published writer, and must decide which man can support her career: the suave and mysterious Adrian or the quiet Bennett, her husband. After countless fluctuations, and a hectic tour of Europe, Isadora accepts her dilemma, and chooses.

Jong rebels against common ideas of the role of woman. She ridicules psychoanalysts in their attempts to convince Isadora that she has no idea of what it is like to be a woman. Isadora refuses to surrender to her family's domestic considerations, and leads a sensual life of beautiful and painful romances. Her conflicts make her flounder as she tries desperately to discover her role as writer, wife, mother, or all three.

Jong writes in simple short sentences with a rich, but crude vocabulary. Somewhere, she appears to be searching for a style that combines all three elements. Unfortunately, her long flashbacks lose the jolting effect of short spontaneous memories, so that we miss much of the confusion that Isadora suffers. But it is Jong's use of the first-person narrative that is most puzzling. She gives us no clue why such a sensitive woman would sacrifice her privacy in such a revealing story, so early in her career.

However, Jong deserves praise for an honest first novel that defies previous portraits of women, delving into the murkiest secrets that many people would rather not hear. Any embarrassments that the reader feels, though, testify to Jong's grasp of the truth.

Many thanks to Smith-Hill bookstore, 193 Princess St., for their generous donation of this book for review.

An inside look at prison life

The Night No One Yelled, a play by Peter Madden will be produced by the Performing Arts Office, Queen's University on March 6, 7 & 8. Written by a former inmate of Collins Bay Penitentiary, the play focusses on the happenings in a cell block one evening.

The play is directed by Peter

Duffy and performed by actors from the Beggars Workshop Theatre in Montreal. Duffy is a graduate of Queen's University in medicine. While a student, he made a number of films in Kingston. Now he successfully combines his medical practice with his career in the theatre.

Peter Madden started writing when he was incarcerated in Collins Bay Pen. He started the prison newspaper and took a creative drama course from Queen's Professor Rod Robertson. Madden's first play, Criminal Record, was produced inside "the Bay" by inmates. This production was invited to the Dominion Drama Festival in 1971. Later he adapted it into a film, Cell 16, which was produced by the National Film Board.

The Night No One Yelled was developed in collaboration with the Beggars Workshop Theatre. It was premiered at Collins Bay Penitentiary in April 1974. Since this time, it has successfully played in Montreal and Toronto.

The masculine struggle

by Michael Creagen

With The Longest Yard, Bob Aldrich seems to have finally achieved the commercial success which he has been striving to attain for some time. But the director barely manages to overcome the shortcomings of the script and even so, the results are tepid.

The Longest Yard resembles Aldrich's The Dirty Dozen in its structure by focusing upon the molding of convicts into a team for one select task. Burt Reynolds, in his smoothest performance, plays an ex-football player who must train a team of convicts for a game against the prison guards.

Tracy Keenan Wynn's script is the film's major fault in that it deals with the stereotypes that have come to be associated with prisons and sports. The cons are the traditional dumb tough guys and the guards are sadistically brutal in the manner of their forefathers of the 30's prison films. As is the case with most sports movies, the corrupt aspect of the game is centred upon.

However Aldrich transcends these conventions and goes beyond presenting the cons or the guards in any good guy-bad guy syndrome. His fascination lies in the masculine values and the struggle of individuals to "be men again, if only for a few hours." Aldrich attempts to make characters out of the caricatures and the film's most beautiful moment occurs after the game when Reynolds and a guard acknowledge each other as fellow competitors without the guard-prisoner labels. It is this individualism and personal stature that is central to Aldrich's masculine world and pulls the film out of its stereotype surroundings.

The set, designed by Valerie Tocco, consists of nine cells. Placed around the audience, the sensation created is one of being in the cell block where the action takes place.

"Kingstonians have driven by the area prisons innumerable times. Very few have been in them at all," said Barry Cole, Director of the performing Arts Office. "For most then, this will be the first opportunity to witness the humour, the tension and the emotion locked behind the grey walls."

"The prisons are a central feature of Kingston. They affect all the residents of the city. This play will effect Kingstonians in another way. It will introduce the humanity of the prison to us."

Scothorn to Nationals

by Jon J.

Tomorrow the Track Gaels travel to Toronto for the OUA championships where there will be over ten teams competing for the honours. Last year Queen's finished 3rd in both Men's and Women's events and in the team event total Queen's also finished third.

Despite the loss of track greats Dave Jarvis, Brian Aiken, and Rod Walters, the team has a many good new faces. The Gaels are younger and possess depth, and what they lack in experience they make up in enthusiasm.

Although Queen's will be weaker in middle distance and relay, on the basis of recent performances in shot and polevault, the Gaels appear to be stronger in these areas. A few injuries have plagued the team such as, leg injuries which have hindered performers like Dave Bronson in the long and triple jumps.

In the sprints Queen's are looking to Stan Woodman and Vic Gooding (Both ranked in Ontario sprints) to finish well up on the rest of the crowd. Scott Ogilvie, Jeff Giles and Paul Spence head a field of younger middle distance runners. All three have turned in competitive times in their events (600m - 1000m.). John Darlington and Walt Simburski will represent the team in the long and triple jump.

Those in the longer races include veteran Bob McCormick, Art Stelpstra and Paul Henry. In the 5000m. event two freshmen distance runners, Max Barr and Mike DeGuda, will represent Queen's. Both made the Cross-country team this past fall with Mike, the "big" Cross-country discovery, finishing second only to captain and veteran Bill Bryden. He has great potential and has recorded fast track times.

Rounding out the team is Mike Forsayeth who hopefully is going to set a new high jump record for Queen's as he's tied it for the last couple of meets now. The team expects likely victories to come from Vic Gooding, Kevin Thompson (shot) and Gary Tetzlaff (pole vault).

The Women's team will be led by Ontario Senior Champion Pam Scotthorn in the Shotput. Pam's recent victory will likely assure her a first place finish, as well as a spot on the Ontario Team for the summer season. In the sprints, rookie Betsey

Carey and Janey O'Rourke are expected to burn up the track while middle distance runners Jan Pipe and Marj Bousfield will attempt to set New Queen's records in their events. Distance runners Sue Plummer, Anne Brown and Lynn Andrews will also attend the meet. Andrews is capable of placing well up in her event.

The University of Toronto team has tremendous depth in all events, especially distance events. Western appears to be very strong in the middle distance and field events. As a matter of fact all schools competing appear to be strong and it is likely that all 12 will send representatives.

The Queen's team have the potential to see each individual score those needed points if Queen's is to retain the 3rd place finish it obtained last year. This year coach Lund hopes to finish no less than third and notes that not one member of the team will be graduating this year, making it stronger than ever in 1976. In fact, next year's team may be the strongest team Queen's has ever had and a team that the T.O. and Western teams will have to reckon with.

Ontario Champs vs. Old Gals Saturday

This Saturday, March 1st, hockey fans will have one more chance to see Ontario's Champs, our very own Queen's Gals Hockey team.

The Gals will take on an eager team of 'Old Gals' who are travelling from various points east and west of Kingston to do battle with our strong championship team. In the true tradition of Swedish "Fly Girls" the pace will be exhausting, the action torrid and needless to say our Gals will come out flying.

The hockey will be exciting, so come to Jock Hart's Arena, Saturday March 1st, at 1:30 p.m.

BACHELOR OF EDUCATION

the faculty of education invites successful graduates and undergraduates who expect to receive their bachelor's degree by September to apply for admission to the bachelor of education degree program which leads to Ontario teacher certification for elementary and secondary schools.

the four-year program meets current and emerging educational needs while emphasizing the human dimensions.
the students have many course selections where consistent with the importance of personal and professional development, evaluations are based on continuous assessment, not term examinations alone.

the students share in making the administrative

Queen's skiers score 1st!

by Bert Tolnai

Two Molson series meets have been held since the adventures of the Queen's ski teams last graced these pages. The York invitational meet was held on Friday, February 14 and this meet turned into somewhat of a horror-show for the Queen's teams as the men were 5th and the women also apparently competed. The bright spots for the men were Tolnai who was 3rd in 46.97, about a second back, and Neilson who was 8th. Carleton's victory in this meet enabled them to wrestle the Molson's circuit title from the defending Queen's team and gave them the overall victory for the season. Queen's, however, remains a close second.

The Queen's women appeared to be somewhat confused during the race as many continued to climb and inspect the course even after the race had begun. These problems during the race were a cause of consternation to coach Judy Cotton who really wanted the girls to show that they could ski intently set slalom courses.

However, the next Thursday at the McMaster Invitational the Queen's teams showed everyone that they could really put out as both the men and women won the team results. At this meet the competitors were not required to swoop and swerve, but instead dashed and darted to the following individual results:

Women:
Ginny Honeyman	2nd
Margie Chaput	4th
Robin McLeod	9th
Mary Chaput	12th
Stephanie Currie	20th Men:
Neilson	2nd
Tolnai	6th
Neilson ("Bert")	7th
Cummings	8th
Hartman	9th

These results were achieved despite the handicaps of arriving at 5:00 am the night before, racing without proper waxing and the absence of coach Judy Cotton. One can only guess at what might have transpired if some of these factors had gone the other way.

This Friday the teams will be at Camp Fortune for a Reisenslalom and this is the final Molson series race for this season. Although the teams will be going to Maine for a race against the U.S. schools, we sure would appreciate some vocal support at this race.

Bews News

This week saw the start of play-off action, although determining division III play-off positions was a challenge, as Business Grads, Meds and Science '78 battled for play-off spots. Monday saw Bus. Grads on top with 11 pts, Science '78 with 10 and Meds with 9. The Science boys and the Meds team, with one game remaining in regular season play, fought a strong battle with Meds eventually eliminating Science '78 2-1. The outcome of the game left Bus. Grads and Meds tied with identical records (11 pts) forcing an extra play-off game to determine which of the two teams would meet Wed., Feb. 26. Meds with some brilliant offensive and defensive work outlasted their opposition 2-0.

In quarter final play Commerce '77 outskated the PHE team in a 4-1 victory. PHE eliminated from further play, began to think of next year's action, as Commerce '77 advanced to semi-final play. In the other quarter final game the powerful Arts '76 team fought against a strong, determined Civil-Math team. The Arts boys didn't show the same ability that won them 26 successive victories over the course of three years, but the strong goal keeping of Raj Anard pulled this victory out of the hat for the Arts team. Player-coach Al Bell commented after the game that the team wasn't skating as it should have and they were also having trouble with their checks. However, he did feel confident that the team could put it together to have a better showing next game. Civil-Math on the other hand, felt that they were the team to break the string of victories. The final outcome, however, saw Arts '76 on top by a 3-1 margin.

Ball Hockey Play-off Schedule - quarter final play
Feb. 27	5:30-7:00	Comm. '76 vs. Arts '76
March 3	10:15pm	Arts '75 vs. PHE
March 4	5:00	Civil vs. Comm. '77
	6:00	Arts '77 vs. Arts '78 or Mining

Broomball Play-offs

In the only semi-final game Arts '77 defeated Commerce '77 1-0 in overtime play. Monday, March 3rd, at 1:30 will see Arts '77 in final play between Arts '76 and Commerce '77.

Waterpolo Play-offs

In quarter final action this week Arts '78 whitewashed Business Grads 6-1 while Civil-Math whipped Arts '77 5-2 and Mechanical outclassed the Commerce team 7-2.

B-ballers go out in glory

by Alps Boniwell

Journal Sports Writer
T'was the night before Reading Week and with out overdoing the dramatics by re-arranging the verse of that traditional Christmas rhyme, U. of T. was here for a basketball game against the Gaels. U. of T. left after more of a basketball game than they came prepared for and the Gaels stayed to celebrate an 81-70 victory. Now, admittedly the impact of this win was less than earth-shattering but to be fair there were certain emotional additions to the game that for Queen's will help preserve it's flavour.

Firstly, this was by no means a friendly match to round out the season. History will show that the Blues had dealt Queen's a rude awakening in the year's first match-up in the form of a 53-55 shellacking. The second meeting of these teams was to be the last game of the schedule. Time for a lot of water to pass under the bridge; 12 games worth to be exact, and when you're harbouring a grudge that's plenty. By the time the wheel had come full cycle and Toronto and Queen's were squaring off again the Gaels definitely were harbouring a grudge. When athletes start feeling that way they start getting psyched, and when they start getting psyched, they start talking about beating the crap out of the other team. The Gaels were psyched, Toronto was the other team.

The other factor to consider was that this was Frank Tindall's final game as head coach of the basketball team. If Notre Dame could do it for Ara, Queen's could do it for Frank, although the nomenclature may give up something in romanticism.

This then set the stage for what was an excellently played ball game in front of a sizable crowd. The half-time score favoured U. of T. by 4; 36-32, however at the risk of being accused of reading too many movie scripts, and Sports Illustrated magazines, I don't think the Gaels ever doubted that they were going to win. In fact if anyone's reading material were to be brought under suspicion it would have to be Norm Hagarty's and Lyn Cond's who both parlayed the stuff that's generally confined to such literature and daydreams into reality. Hagarty had the Queen's attack throughout, especially in the second half. If you've ever fought for perfect offensive rebounding position, only to watch every shot fall directly through the hoop, you'll appreciate Norm's accuracy on that night. He finished with 34 points. Cond, for his part, wasn't any worse. Starting his first regular season game, he played like he was a dream, quarterbacking the team and scoring 16 points.

Although T.O. failed to clinch a playoff spot with a victory they were quite happy to leave their chances in the incapable hands of RMC whose loss to the Blues that following Saturday secured for them a perfect 9-14 record and for Toronto a berth in the playoffs. As the final standing turned out Toronto ended up 7-7, as did Carleton, although they missed the post-season fun, and Queen's was 6-8, splitting two games with both Toronto and Carleton. Not bad, but just wait until next year.

New Council members face spoof report, censure motion

The last AMS meeting was one of those particularly hot-tempered fervent meetings. Because it was the last meeting of this year's Outer Council and the first meeting of next year's Outer Council, a more than usual size crowd filled the gallery.

Council was confronted with a bluff restructuring report as well as the near censuring of their newly instated AMS President, John Gray.

In a report written by Peter Druxerman former AMS Vice-President (Operations) called the PED Report: a potential solution to the AMS political decline Druxerman presented a complete restructuring of the AMS. Separated into 'political' and 'business' ends the report confronted council with a "somewhat radical" revamping of the AMS structure and council exhibited some difficulty in knowing just how to accept the report.

Tony Wolman former AMS President commented that "it's a drastic report" and should be forwarded to another committee for consideration. Bob Wood former Campus Activities Commissioner noted the "serious implications and ramifications" of the report while other council members expressed suspicions of the report in its being written by only one person rather than by a committee.

Terry MacI former OFS delegate questioned the whole point of restructuring. "Whatever we do" he said "the student body doesn't respond". Perhaps we should be considering reconstruction of the student body.

MacI also pointed out that an organization which continually attempts to restructure itself is one with no security. "It's a lost cause" he said.

Bruce Trotter, Rector told council that "Druxerman is pulling a spoof on all of us". He emphasized that this is the last meeting of outer council and they're still unsure of their direction. "It's not the content but the principal behind the restructuring but the consideration of the entire AMS position".

After Trotter's enlightening words Druxerman confirmed his own position. "The report was written to make you people think so that the new Outer Council can learn from your mistakes". He thanked council for thinking for the first time all year and when the vote to accept his report was taken he did not come out in its favour.

Later on that evening Sue Harper ASUS President 74-75 put in a motion to censure the new AMS President John Gray for making "unrepresentative and irresponsible" remarks about a recent OFS conference.

In an article written by Journal reporter Ian Jarvis Gray expressed personal doubts about continued support of OFS. After quoting from the Feb. 14 Journal article Harper charged Gray with discrediting "the only body that represents student's opinions to the government".

She said that the executive "must represent council" and pointed out that since the campus had shown their support of OFS, the AMS council must also show their public support in order to remain a "viable organization".

A vote for censure was taken which resulted in a tied vote. Brian Copeland, Speaker who was in a position to break the tie felt he could not make an unbiased decision and left the stalemate for the new council. However he pointed out that because no majority was reached the motion does not pass.

Senate now reviewing discipline

The Senate has created a special committee to review the Senate Statement on Grievance Discipline and Related Matters dated April 27, 1972 in the light of the University community's experience with the operation of the procedures and rules contained in the 1972 Statement. The Committee has already submitted to the Senate and Senate has approved changes in the procedures by which claims of grievance are to be heard and determined. Copies of these new procedures are available in the Senate Office and will be given broad publication in due course.

The Senate Committee invites comment from members of the University community concerning other aspects of the 1972 Senate Statement including the following matters:

1. The Code of Conduct: The 1972 Statement sets forth the type of conduct which is unacceptable and constitutes an offence within the University community. Are any modifications required?

2. The Rules and Regulations of all authorized Rule-Making bodies on campus such as Faculty Boards and Residence Boards: Are they satisfactory?
3. The Role of the Grievance Officer.
4. The Role of the Faculty.

Student Advisor.
5. The Activities and Relationship of Law Enforcement Agencies on campus.
6. The Rules with respect to the Confidentiality of Information relating to faculty members students and employees of the University.
Comments may be sent to the Chairman Associate Dean Robinson, Faculty of Law or to any member of the Committee. The members of the Committee are:

Mr. David Armstrong (Applied Science) Dr. B. Buchan (School of Business) Dr. G. Rawlyk (Department of History) Mr. R. Stead (Law '75).

Sunday: 134th Baccalaureate

Queen's University will hold its 134th Baccalaureate Service in Grant Hall at 11:30 a.m. Sunday, March 9.

The Baccalaureate Preacher will be the Reverend Dr. D.H.C. Read. He is the Minister of Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. First Chaplain to the University of Edinburgh and former Chaplain to Her Majesty the Queen in Scotland.

Read is widely and favourably known as a frequent visitor to Colleges and Universities.

The Baccalaureate Service dates from the earliest years of the University when the Bachelor degree was the only degree Queen's gave. Held in March it is a Service in which the University honours its graduates and gives thanks for the vision and sacrifice of its founders who established under Royal Charter in the first decade of Queen Victoria's reign the first Canadian University to open its doors to qualified candidates regardless of race, sex, creed or class.

The Queen's Choral Ensemble under the direction of Professor Denise Narcisse-Mair will sing Edmund Hooper's Anthem "Teach Me Thy Way, O Lord".

AN EDITORIAL COMMENT

Outer Council should be allowed to consider plans for student housing

by Sarah Yarnell

Within several weeks, the University may make public its building plans for student accommodation. In the meantime, costs and desirability of two alternative proposals are being discussed in closed meetings of the Senate Sub-Committee on Student Residences Planning and the Senate Campus Planning Committee.

The plans look good, and undoubtedly will be well received by students. Nevertheless, it doesn't appear that students will be asked to consider the final proposal before it goes to Senate for approval. While it is understandable that the University wants to keep the alternative plans out of the public eye (and free from potential adversity from Kingstonians), it is discouraging to think that students will not be asked for approval of the chosen plan before it goes to Senate and Board of Trustees to be finalized.

In the formative stages of plans to build accommodation, the University tried carefully to include student input. "Housing surveys" were issued on several different occasions, in an attempt to determine what type of accommodation students preferred. Also, there are a few student members on the two particular committees involved, and 14 student members of Senate itself. But all this doesn't mean that the students' society - the AMS - shouldn't help to make the final decision on what accommodation is built for students.

The time is now for Outer Council to approach the University and to ask that the housing proposal to be submitted for consideration to a closed meeting of Outer Council. In doing so, Council would be on the way to performing their task of ensuring that students' interests are fairly represented in this matter.

Student accommodation, built by the University, will help to ease the Kingston housing squeeze.

New round of AMS Commissioners

Peter Lane
External Affairs
Commissioner

"The External Affairs Commission is responsible for relations between the AMS and bodies external to the AMS, as well as a number of ongoing programs. This year in the commission we will adopt a policy of political and social activism, and hope that to break down some of the barriers between Queen's students and the Kingston community."

Peter Meech
Services Commissioner

"The Services Commission operates more services than any other Canadian university; these include the Pub, Housing Service, Bus-It, three publications, printing and typing services and Job Bank. The commissioner's responsibility must be to maintain and upgrade all of these services as well as find new ones as they become necessary. I urge you to become fully aware of what is being offered and to make yourself heard if you have any suggestions."

David Honey
Education Commissioner

"The university fails in one of its primary purposes. It should instill in students a critical and concerned attitude toward life and society; not complacency. The Education Commission conducts educational programs, and sponsors topical and relevant events such as discussion, speakers and films related to matters which are not fully taught in the university."

Graham Findlay
Campus Activities
Commissioner

"The Campus Activities Commission is a co-ordination and room allocation agency providing entertainment policies and communication links between

Brian Copeland
Internal Affairs
Commissioner

"The Internal Affairs Commissioner is responsible for the AMS Court, the constable system, clubs, information bank and elections and referenda. ## Gray's Challenge to all Students

It is with a great deal of concern that I offer a challenge to the students of Queen's to become directly involved in university student affairs for next year. Having a difficult task in representing your interests for the following year we have just begun our work. I encourage you to seriously consider the positions available on AMS and AMS committees, commissions and publications etc.

It is important that you weigh your role in student government. Benefits derived from being actively involved outside the classroom give a great deal of satisfaction. What is now needed is a responsible attitude taken towards the AMS by the students.

It's one thing to sit back and appraise us (the new executive) but it's an entirely different matter to get yourself directly involved.

It's not only experience but energy and creative ideas that we are looking for. Don't allow a lack of working knowledge of these positions to discourage you. We have the information and are more than willing to discuss them with you. We urge you to get involved.

"Pub firing" article under fire

biased and uniformed

Dear Editor,

The article in Friday's Journal on the firing of the Pub staff was biased and uniformed. Miss Sherkin should refrain from making seemingly criminal accusations based on circumstantial evidence. Factual reporting is one thing; character assassination is another. Until all the facts are revealed and all sides have a chance to present their cases it is not the role of the university newspaper to point the finger.

Lizza Fawcett

innuendo and insinuation

Dear Editor:

Surprising as it may seem, this letter will not be an attempt to argue whether my dismissal as Pub Manager was justified or not. This letter is directed towards the author of that piece of trash on the Journal's front page last Friday (Feb. 28).

The article was a compilation of innuendo and insinuation bordering on libel. If the intent of Joyce Roe had been to convey that Cathy and I had somehow conspired to steal $50 from the Pub I am sure she would have voiced those feelings. If the Journal had not intended to truthfully report the reasons for dismissal, why did it bother writing anything at all? And, if somehow the article was an honest mistake in reportage journalism then perhaps the writer should clarify his/her article. In either case I strongly feel an apology is due from the Journal for unnecessarily and unjustifiably besmerching not so much my character, as Cathy Simpson's.

My opinion (for what it is worth) is that Cathy and I have both been tried, convicted and sentenced by one person in the A.M.S. I think it rather peculiar that our elected (and acclaimed) officials no longer run that corporation. This is not the first instance of a flagrant use of power. I am sure if you asked Kim Usher (Summer Pub Manager) or Dave Findlay (Concerts Chairman) or Sheila MacIntyre (Housing Chairman) that they would have definite opinions on exactly who runs the A.M.S. There is no doubt in my mind. Perhaps some investigative work on your part could shed some light on why this is so. It would certainly be a better expenditure of energy than that article on Friday.

In closing I would like to say that many people, some whom I have never met before have come up to me and agreed with my stand against Roe and the A.M.S. (For an executive that should be trying its hardest to win people over, they are doing everything possible to alienate people from the A.M.S. To those persons I have never met and especially the many friends who have also supported me I extend my thanks. At times like these you really know who your friends are and to those people I shall remain,

Sincerely yours,
Brian Sterling

more gossip than news

Dear Editor,

It is with great concern that I read the article in Friday's Journal with regard to the firing of the Pub Manager and assistant Manager. I question why the Journal finds it necessary to print this type of article which is closer to gossip than it is to news.

The selective use of quotation marks throughout the article leaves the impression to the reader that there was some element of dishonesty on behalf of the two people involved. This type of innuendo serves only to attack the character of the two individuals for which there is no basis whatsoever. The firings were the result of mismanagement solely and that was the only reason.

I would suggest that the Journal should adopt a more respectable attitude dealing with this type of story and more importantly, now owes an apology to both Mr. Sterling and Miss Simpson. A change in the Journal's idea of front page news stories is long overdue. I can only hope that the increase in the funds paid by students to the Journal will be met by a sharp improvement in the responsibility of its staff.

Yours sincerely
Ian V. Nordheimer
Vice-President (Operations)
Alma Mater Society

fair hearing for Simpson

Dear Editor,

Last week's dismissal of Cathy Simpson from her post as Assistant Manager of the Pub leaves many unanswered questions. The report published in the Journal is damaging by innuendo, but in a matter which is so important for Cathy's reputation, offers very little hard and conclusive evidence of the alleged "incompetence."

To ensure that Cathy has a fair hearing an impartial inquiry should be initiated. In order to give us confidence in the Pub's management such action is urgent.

Sincerely,
Heather Ritchie

More Letters

Gift from '76

Dear Editor

I am writing this open letter to inform the students of Artsci '76 in particular and the students of this campus in general that the executive of Artsci '76 will be presenting our year's Graduation Gift to the University to Principal Watts at the Arts Formal next Saturday March 8. Our Graduation Gift will be a donation of approximately one thousand dollars towards the University's "RAINBOW PROJECT", Project Green.

The University's "RAINBOW PROJECTS" program includes many specific projects to "enrich the learning experiences of students in many disciplines" as quoted in the Alumni Review, Nov.-Dec. 1974. The Review also describes "Rainbows" as "promises for the future", and we feel that our donation to this specific project is certainly a contribution towards the future and to all students of this university community.

The special guests of Artsci '76 for the evening will include Principal Watts, Dean Sinclair, Dr. Heyding and Vice-Principal Courtwright. It should be noted that formal wear is not mandatory and that any student or faculty member may purchase tickets in the John Orr Room 10:30-1:30 daily. We hope that students of Artsci '76 as well as other years will enjoy this evening and be there for the presentation of our gift to the Principal.

Jim Henderson
President Artsci '76

'English Head?'

Dear Editor:

Some time in the summer or fall of '73, a committee was set up by the Queen's English Department to search for a new Dept. Head. As the then Head's term in that position drew to a close in June '74, it was apparent that no suitable candidate was forthcoming; and for this reason the then Head - reluctantly as it seems - agreed to remain at the helm. This course of events seems the more unfortunate now when rumours have been confirmed concerning the interest in this position - albeit belated - of an eminently qualified, brilliant, and internationally renowned scholar. He is Dr. Numbskull Nimrod, world famous linguist and phallologist. Dr. Nimrod ('Numb' to his friends), after a long and tortuous search, was finally traced by an enterprising correspondent of the Weisnichts Evening Times, Mr. A. Non, to a little Bavarian town called Weisnichtswo, where Dr. Nimrod is presently researching the etymology of the word 'A'. When asked by Mr. Non about his alleged interest in the Headship of the Queen's English Dept., Dr. Nimrod replied: "Raphael may amech zabi almi - from which is immediately apparent Dr. Nimrod's enthusiastic interest, admirable suitability, and unsurpassed qualifications. Unfortunately since news of this opportunity reached him too late, it was not given to Dr. Nimrod on this occasion."

Yours very truly
B. Gone (G32-Q)

Poor service

Dear Editor,

Reading Week has passed; we had a great deal of reading to do. But looking at the library schedules there was no improvement for this special week. We realize of course that inflation is doing wonders to the budget and that services have to be cut somewhere. But are the Libraries really the places to scrimp on personnel?

Pub apology

Since the article in last Friday's Journal (Feb. 28) regarding the firing of Pub Manager and the Assistant Manager unnecessary aspersions have been cast over the characters of both Brian Sterling and Cathy Simpson.

We apologize and accept criticisms for any insinuation or character defamation which may have resulted.

As presented by Joyce Roe Personnel Manager of the AMS, Cathy Simpson was fired from her position as a result of incompetence while Brian Sterling was fired for not wishing to dismiss Simpson. Let no insinuation blanket these facts.

*Ladies and Gentlemen:
For your Entertainment
And Edification,
We present to you:*

Fred van driel

Back in 1905, a few freshmen decided that Queen's University needed a Brass Band, "to help things along at football matches." They were "turfed out" (by the football team) from the basement in which they practiced, and suffered verbal abuse during their parades to the football field. The quotes come from a letter written by Chancellor J.B. Stirling, one of the founding members.

After two years this band dissolved. It had had only twelve members, and no uniforms, but it was in many ways like its present counterpart. They had unlimited enthusiasm and a limited repertoire, specializing in "Queen's College Colours". Shaky as their status was, they were the first recorded instance of marching band at Queen's University.

After this first attempt, the band was silent until 1920. When it reappeared, it had about twenty members, who supplied their own uniforms, music, and instruments. The uniforms were not then the now traditional kilts but consisted rather of Tricolor sweaters, white duck pants, and Frosh tams. Again the emphasis was on good times and spirit. The band played at rugby and Hockey games, as well as at football games. In fact, its main function was to perform at rugby games. In these days, the band held "tag days" to get up funds for away games.

The class of Science '41 was the major force which enabled the band to get the uniforms which it now wears. (As a matter of fact, the band is still wearing some of the original 1946 vintage stuff!) They turned the rights to the 'Sadie Hawkins' Dance, which was a very lucrative affair, over to the bands. In addition, students agreed to pay a small levy. It was just after the war that the band was able to procure the present uniforms. In 1963, even the A.M.S. gave money, that being back in the times that they could.

Everybody was proud of our band back in the early days, and people wrote letters to the Journal urging that they be supported. It has been growing larger and more prominent throughout the years and the emphasis has always been on spirit rather than sheer musical proficiency. This can be easily explained: the Brass Band has always felt that harmonic perfection is boring, and therefore choose to play their own way. They do this at all football games, home and away, accompanied by the Queen's Majorettes. A group of the more spirited members have played their own way at hockey games ever since the beginning, maturing this year into the Attila the Hun All Hot Dog Memorial Band.

In 1925 the daring and intrepid Bill Watson of Meds '29 conceived of the idea of a pipe band for Queen's. There was one other student piper that year, and three imports from the city. They purchased six uniforms, and were presented with a set of pipes by the Kingston

The Queen's Bands!

St. Andrews Society. Despite this promising start, the band faded away after 1927.

It wasn't until 1938 that it was revived. Principal Wallace thought that it would be good to have it in the Queen's Centennial Celebrations in 1941. Reg Hanna, a member of the original band took charge. Since Queen's had no pipers of its own that year, the band was again made up of Kingstonians. Hanna advertised lessons for students, so that an all student band could appear in the celebration. The next year (1935) the band was composed entirely of students, except for Reg Hanna and the bass drummer. Reg Hanna continued to instruct until 1954 when poor health forced him to back down. The presence of the band has attracted a group of highland dancers. At first men did the dancing, but now it has been taken over by the women.

The origins of the cheerleading squad are lost, shrouded in mystery. They may have been around since the beginning, and gradually become associated with the bands. They are now, of course, an integral part, joining in with the parades, and keeping the crowds alive at football games.

Since 1956, when the band first got its kilts, it has become a symbol of Queen's Scottish Tradition. They demonstrate the difference between Queen's and the other Universities.

They demonstrate the difference in other ways too, specifically in their exuberance, embodying "the old College Spirit" for which Queen's stands.

This is what our band looked like in the thirties, before the kilted look came in.

On parade out to Richardson Stadium for a football game.

Life, death, and Yeats

Eric Hughes

From Tuesday, March 4th until Friday, March 7th, the Queen's Drama department will present the play Purgatory by William Butler Yeats. The play, written in 1938, explores Yeats' concept of life, death, and that indefinable space between where we seek to be purged of our past crimes and sins.

In an attempt to clarify some of Yeats' symbols and trace his development from 1885 until his death in 1939, a short and selected reading of his poetry will preface the play.

This production is part of the Drama Department Chronicles series, and tickets are free from the Drama Desk in the basement of the Old Arts Building. Show time is 7:30 p.m.

Loggins and Messina: tradition and innovation

Loggins and Messina: TRADITION AND INNOVATION
Loggins and Messina
Motherlode
Columbia

by Tim Runge
and David Card

Loggins and Messina's newest album is characterized by an outstanding smoothness in instrumentals and vocals that makes it both a pleasure to listen to and a marvel of unobtrusive engineering. The creative orchestration of Jim Messina, who also presents a flawless lead guitar performance throughout the album and a singularly remarkable mandolin solo on the second cut, "Be Free", combines jazz influenced brass and saxophone solos and backgrounds with touches of electronic back-up and the folk-oriented style that Loggins and Messina have maintained on their previous albums.

The musical content of Motherlode, is widely varied, reflecting the exceptional talent of both its principals and the six or seven musicians who complete its repertoire. The traditional folk style of Kenny Loggins creates a pleasant counter balance with some of the album's more jazz-like compositions.

Motherlode presents an interesting combination of different instruments, and of various moods and styles. The jazz-like pieces never become over-exuberant, yet never lose their spirit or tempo. With a combination of flute, violin, harmonica, saxophone, mandolin and guitar, Loggins and Messina are successful in creating what could be termed modern folk-jazz: sometimes subdued, with only woodwinds and mellow vocals, and then approaching the other extreme, often within the same piece.

It is this interesting variety of tempo changes that makes

Motherlode constantly flowing, fresh and never tiring to the ear. The album has been expertly produced, and comes across with a clear and concise sound. "Move On", on the second side, is probably Motherlode's triumph, in terms both of style and of exceptional musicianship, and will surely put a sound system to the test.

Motherlode is an interesting album, featuring a wide variety of instruments and methods of playing. It can be highly recommended to the individual who will enjoy a fascinating combination of folk and jazz.

Modern dance

On Wednesday March 12, the Anna Wyman Dance Theatre will perform in the Grand Theatre at 8:30 p.m. The Anna Wyman Dance Theatre is a company of nine dancers presenting programs of contemporary dance and creative improvisation, under the artistic direction of Anna Wyman, choreographer and teacher.

The company made its professional debut after three years of training and rehearsals. The company performed in the 1971-72 season at the Vancouver Art Gallery, North Vancouver Centennial Theatre, and the Richmond Arts Festival.

In the summer of 1973, the company participated at the International Young Choreographers Competition in Cologne, Germany. The company was judged one of the three best entries, and received a standing ovation for their performance at the Cologne Opera House. Anna Wyman and the company finished the summer with a successful residency at the Shawinigan Lake International Summer School for the Arts.

The dance company will complete the Vibrant Stage series for this year, presented by the Performing Arts Office, Queen's.

Queen's Drama Guild celebrates seventy-fifth anniversary

Preparing for On the Air

In years past

Seventy-five years ago it would have been scandalous to suggest offering a credit course in drama. And there was considerable opposition expressed when, in November, 1899, a group of students formed a dramatic club with a professor, W.S. Dyde, as its president.

But despite the objections, the Queen's Dramatic Club flourished and in 1900 began staging excerpts from Shakespeare plays, with appropriate music, songs and recitations.

The first public performance, held in Convocation Hall, included the trial scene from The Merchant of Venice. The "Evening with Shakespeare" was so successful, the club gave a second presentation in the Grand Opera House.

The first complete play, Shakespeare's As You Like It, was performed in 1906 at the Grand. The college's symphony orchestra played between acts.

In 1909, the club turned from Shakespeare to restoration comedy, presenting Sheridan's The Rivals. Over the next several years a variety of plays, largely by contemporary playwrights, were produced.

The club weathered an attempt by the Alma Mater Society in 1926 to disband it by converting itself into a guild and selling membership cards for $1. Interest in the new Dramatic Guild began in 1931, and the organization had to turn away would-be actors. The golden years.

In 1937, the Guild produced The Taming of the Shrew, the first Shakespearean play performed on campus in 28 years. But it wasn't until 1945 that Shakespeare became a regular feature of the Guild's playbill, at the urging of Dr. Harrison, a prominent Shakespeare scholar. "Doc" Angus started a Radio Institute for summer students in the mid-forties, with guest lecturers for several areas of the broadcasting field. Lorne Greene was among them.

The Drama Guild began its association with the fledgling Queen's radio station in 1925, when part of Galsworthy's play, The Silver Fox, was broadcast.

But in the '40's, the Queen's Radio Workshop was formed as a branch of the Guild and in 1946 began broadcasting a one-hour program of drama every Wednesday night.

Dr. Angus' Radio Institute began to falter when Lorne Green set up his own broadcasting school in Toronto, late in the '40's.

The first student sent on a scholarship from Queen's to the Lorne Greene school was an A.R. (Sandy) Webster, who, like his older brother Stewart, was president of the Drama Guild.

Sandy Webster is now a Canadian actor and writer. He recently played the role of Sir John A. Macdonald in Jean Gascon's production of Riel at the National Arts Centre in Ottawa.

Principal's Reception

The Celebration

To commemorate the Drama Guild's anniversary, current members presented a simulated "live broadcast" of two radio plays, written by David Fanstone, this year's Guild president. Both plays were produced in the 40's style and are from the Guild Hall Mystery Theatre productions heard Fridays at 8.30 p.m. on CFRB-AM.

After the plays, there was a reception in the McLaughlin Room, where pictures, scrapbooks and costumes from years past were on display. This was the first chance many of the alumni had had to get together for some years. After registration on Saturday morning there was a slide presentation narrated by "Doc" Angus showing some of the major productions done by the Guild in its history of dramatic presentations in Kingston and at Convocation Hall.

Robert Beattie, Arts '57, a former Guild member and presently a theatre arts teacher, in Toronto then held a workshop in the studio. Many of the alumni, now teachers at the primary and secondary levels, discussed innovations and exchanged ideas and books dealing with the introduction of dramatic arts to students. Mr. Alexander (Sandy) Webster, Arts '49, former Guild President and an actor and writer for the stage, radio and television answered questions put to him by present Guild members.

Saturday night, there was an anniversary banquet, which was attended mainly by visiting alumni. At the head table were R. Trousdell, acting-head of the Drama Department, Mrs. Webster, M. Simkins, Chairwoman of the Anniversary Committee, "Doc" Angus, Alexander (Sandy) Webster, guest speaker; Dr. Stewart Webster, Arts '43,

Sandy Webster, Guest Speaker, talks at workshop

Master of Ceremonies, former Guild president; Principal Watts; A. Arrowsmith; D. Fanstone, and J. Snarr, almost all of whom had their turn at the microphone.

Janet Snarr announced the winners of the Guild's playwriting contest. First prize and $100 went to Martin Borycki from the University of Saskatchewan for his play Almost Harvest, and two prizes of $50 each were awarded to the runners-up: F. Mosher from the University of Alberta for his play Pause and D.

Moses from York University for his play Billy the Kid in France. After a very wholesome speech by Sandy Webster, everyone returned to Convocation Hall to watch as former stars, with book in hand, re-created roles they had done years ago, in scenes from The Glass Menagerie, 1949; Othello, 1950; The Merchant of Venice, 1954; Hamlet, 1955; and A Question of Fact, 1957. After this production, with old friendships renewed and new ones formed, the group slowly, noisily dispersed.

Yet to come

To further commemorate this anniversary the Guild has obtained the rights for The Fantastics, a musical play by Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt, to be produced May 22-31st, with auditions to be held in two weeks.

Molson's ski series chugs to finale

Queen's held its own invitational meet last Friday at Camp Fortune as the Molson sponsored 7-race circuit wound up in fine style. The race proved to be one of the best, if not THE best, of the season thanks to the tremendous organizational work done by Dr. and Mrs. Neilson, Jamie Neilson and all the gatekeepers and starters. The race was run without a hitch, a fact certainly enjoyed by all the racers as well as the number of Queen's students who came out to watch the proceedings.

The Queen's Gals had a few problems on the long, icy turny course as they managed a 4th place finish behind Ottawa U., McGill and Waterloo. Ginny Honeyman was unfortunately outdone by Val Watson of Ottawa who won with a combined time of 84:29. Robin Macleod had the best Queen's result placing 9th in 91:44 while Margie Bartlett was 13th in 97:56. Close on her heels was Marg Chaput, finishing in 14th place with a time of 100:39, Mary Chaput 17th in 104:70 and Stephanie Currie 18th in 108:21.

Meanwhile, the men's "A" team manoeuvred their team to a first place finish having 5 racers in the top 11. Jamie Neilson hit hardware territory as he was 3rd in 78:39 behind Rick Hunter's winning in 74:75. Burt Neilson followed with a 4th place finish in 78:66, while Bruce Cummings finished 6th with 79:10. Peter Tolnai came in 8th in 79:10 and Bill Hartman pulled up the rear with 11th place in a time of 80:71.

Queen's was also represented by a second men's who rocked their way to a 4th place finish to beat both Carleton's A and B teams. The times that were recorded are as follows:

Andy Scott 12th	89.86 seconds
Rob Beattie 14th	81.84 seconds
John Knowles 16th	83.43 seconds
Mike Barnes 30th	99.72 seconds

John Clark DNF

Of course, this being the final race, results from the overall series were computed. Some mixed feelings were had as the girls won the series title by a fairly good margin but the boys were just a fraction away from successfully defending their title as Carleton nipped us to win 49-47 in series points.

Individually, however, the results are extremely impressive. For the girls the co-winner of the title (along with Val Watson of Ottawa) was Ginny Honeyman. Attired in a red sweater, with eyes to match, Ginny stepped up to receive her award and gift (which was an ice bucket) Margie Chaput was fourth overall and almost nipped into hardware territory.

The men's team results are even more astounding, to summarize:

1st Phil Gaulin	Ottawa 37 points
2nd Rob Burpee	Carleton 36 points
3rd Mike Ryan	Carleton 33 points
4th Jamie Neilson	Queen's 32 points
5th Rick Hunter	Carleton 30 points
6th Doug Carter	U of T 27 points
7th Ian Neilson	Queen's 26 points
8th Bob Langevin	Carleton 25 points
9th Peter Tolnai	Queen's 24 points

Although the Molson's circuit is completed, a few Canadian Schools (including Queen's) are travelling to Bethel Maine on March 11-15, for a Can-Am race with the U.S. teams. This race promises to be a real grudge match for the men, as the University of Mass. won the Can-Am race at Mont Ste. Anne in January, merely by standing up. The girls also are hoping to defend their win at the same meet. This race also provides an opportunity for the downhill jocks to show their stuff.

Waterpolo Gals take bronze in provincial championships

by The Ladies Themselves
This weekend past, Queen's Waterpolo Gals competed in the Ontario Provincial Senior Championships along with seven other top teams from across Ontario. The two day tournament was held at York University in Toronto.

Queen's Gals started the weekend right by defeating Western 10-2. Linda Orset, a new recruit from Western lead the scoring against her ex-teammates followed closely by Deb Draper. The next game on Saturday was against Ottawa. (The Ottawa team had three girls representing Canada in Holland last year). As expected the Ottawa team was tough competition and managed to squeak by the hard working Gals by one point in a hard fought match. Hamilton 'A' team was the next adversary. Hamilton is an extremely strong team with five national players and has held first place in Ontario for the last three years. Hamilton maintained its unblemished record Saturday against Ottawa and Western, as well as Queen's. These Saturday games put Queen's in the finals with Hamilton 'A' and 'B' teams as well as Ottawa.

Sunday, found Queen's in the water against the Hamilton Pirhanas ('A' team). Again, Hamilton's rough and tough team was successful in outscoring Queen's for another win. Ottawa's first game of the day was against the tiring Gals at 9:20. Ottawa managed to win this second game although it was evident that Queen's and Ottawa are very well matched teams. At 11:00 Queen's got a second (third?) wind and relieved their frustrations on Hamilton's 'B' team with a convincing 7-2 win. This secured a third place finish for the Gals. Hamilton 'A' cured a third place finish for the Gals. Hamilton 'A' beat Ottawa to place first and Ottawa came second.

Deb Draper lead the overall scoring for Queen's with a lucky thirteen goals. Star defenseman

Deb Turnbull was second high scorer followed by Linda Orset and rookie Kathy Blanchard. Cathy Brown, Robin Leighton and Kathy Beatty also netted one goal each. Three year veterans Joan Eaton (defense) and Heather Scott (goalie) took care of the 'hole' and goal nets against the opposing forces. Special mention goes to rookie Cathy MacKay for countless assists.

The ten players would like to thank Deanna Eversden for acting as our manager as well as being generous with moral support! Mike Fox, our assistant coach for the competition deserves more than thanks for his patience, welcome sense of humour and expert advice during the games. And most important of all, we would like to thank Brian Evidenour our coach of three years. He managed to transform what was a rather sloppy and disjointed team in October, into a bronze medal team in just five months of training! So for those of you who are amazed to learn that Queen's has a women's Waterpolo team—SEE YOU NEXT YEAR!

Gaels to allstar teams

by Peter Watts

Three members of the Queen's Golden Gaels hockey and basketball teams were selected to league allstar squads in balloting carried on last week by the league's coaches. Netminder Clyde Harris made the east division first allstar team while teammate Frank Coffey was named as one of the forwards on the east division second allstar squad. Forward John Keck was the only member of the basketball Gaels selected; he was named to the east division second team. In addition to Harris, other players on the first allstar hockey squad were defensemen Warren Anderson of Toronto, and Steve Aubrey of Ottawa and forwards Ivan McFarlane of Toronto, Doug Dunsmyr of York and Bill Fox of Ottawa. Named to the second allstar team in addition to Coffey were netminder Dave Tataryn of Laurentian, defensemen Dan Cuomo of Laurentian and Gord Cullen of York and forwards Al Avery and Tim Ampleford, also of the Yeomen.

The east division first allstar team included guards Ev Spence of York and Paul Armstrong of Carleton along with forwards John Plaskacz and Merv Sabey of Ottawa and Mike Visser of Laurentian. In the second team in addition to Keck were Jeff Bennett and Ken Olynok of Laurentian, Rick Kazanowski of Carleton and Glenn Scott of Toronto.

Basketball and hockey playoffs started last weekend and by the end of this weekend, the Ontario champions in both sports will have been decided. Queen's University, of course will not be represented in either sport as both Tri-color teams finished in fifth place in their respective leagues.

In hockey, first of all, the OUA finals will be played at Toronto's University Arena. The York Yeomen will take on Western at 6 p.m. in the first game while the Blues will meet defending champion Waterloo at 9 p.m. The two winners will meet on Saturday for the title. It promises to be an interesting weekend with the York Yeomen having a good shot at the title. The Yeomen knocked off Western 10-2 in league play three weeks ago and had little trouble knocking the Ottawa GeeGees out of the playoff picture in quarter-final action last weekend. The Blues, on the other hand, needed an overtime goal from Larry Hopkins to beat Laurentian Voyageurs 4-3 in their sudden death quarter-final last Friday night in Toronto. Western can be considered the darkhorse team this year while the Waterloo Warriors last year's national intercollegiate champs, have a strong team. They have met the Blues twice this year with each team winning a game. The Blues victory, however, was in exhibition play while the Waterloo victory came in a regular league contest.

In basketball, we are now assured of a new provincial and national champion as a result of last weekend's quarter-final action. Defending champion Guelph Gryphons were beaten 82-80 by second place Windsor Lancers in one west division playoff while nationally ranked Waterloo easily beat McMaster in the other game. In the east division, Ottawa beat Toronto 69-62 and Laurentian topped York in the other quarter-final matchup. The semi-finals will be played tonight at Waterloo with Laurentian meeting Ottawa in one game while Waterloo and Windsor clash in the other. The two winners will meet on Saturday for the OUA title.

'Iced'

Ontario Champions, the Queen's Golden Gaels, faced off Saturday against a slightly rusty but eager team of 'Old Gaels' who declined the offer of wheelchairs to provide Queen's fans with a final glimpse of the 1975 Champs in action.

It took less than 7 seconds for Jan Atkinson to capitalize on a one-man advantage, giving Queen's the first goal. The Old Gaels stormed back to tie the score several minutes later, however, on a marker by Cookie Cartwright, assisted by Annabelle Twiddy.

A quick line change saw Flossie Bartlett and Sandy Statten assist each other on two Queen's counters while Sue Wright potted one unassisted to make the score 4-1. It took the Old Gaels several minutes to get enough wind back to retaliate.

Second period action started off with Janeen Gerow tallying from Sandy Statten, followed by Annabelle Twiddy scoring her second marker of the match. However, Marg Bartlett's second goal of the game and Barb Fee's period-finishing goal proved to revive the "oldies".

As the game continued, captain Les Ferrari scored on a pass from Rhonda Leeman and Sandy Statten put the icing on the Queen's cake with an additional goal. Queen's goalie Marg Booth played a consistent game minding the net and blocking all 3 shots, while Old Gaels netminder "Shorty" Cartwright knocked down 27 shots. The final score of the game was 9-3 for the Ontario Champs.

For the '75 Gals the game rounded out a very successful season of exhibition games, league matches and of course, the Ontario Championships. "It's a long way from last to first place but we're here now to stay."

Track and Field

Lucky 3 for Gaels & Gals

In a meet held at the CNE this past weekend Queen's retained its reputation as one of the top three universities in track and field in Ontario. For the men, the final standings saw U. of T. on top (180 pts.), Western 2nd (112.5 pts.), Queen's 3rd (73 pts.), McMaster 4th (23), Guelph 5th (22pts.) and York 6th (14pts.) while the rest had difficulty hitting double figures. The women were equally impressive with a 3rd place finish. The standings of the nine schools competing were: Western 1st (110pts.), Toronto 2nd (75 pts.), Queen's 3rd (42 pts.), Brock (29pts.), and McMaster (13 pts.).

to take placings of 5th and 10th, respectively. The gruelling 5000m. was the next event. Both Mike DeQuinda and Max Barr turned in good performances to place 7th. (15:51.0 sec.) and 10th. (16:21.0 sec.)

The men's 4x200m. relay was headed for a third place finish until a dropped baton disqualified the team of Cochrane, Stan Woodman, Macaulay and Gooding. The 4x400m. relay, however, did finish 3rd, as each member of the team; Cochrane, Spence, Macaulay and Gooding recorded excellent splits to finish in a time of 3:26.7 sec. The distance medley relay (800m - 400m 1200m - 1600m) closed out the meet with the team of Ogilvie, Henry, MacCormack and Art Stelstra finishing 6th. in 10:42.0 sec.

had times of 5:24.6 and 5:32.0 to finish 5th and 6th respectively. In the 1000m. times of 3:18.8 sec. 3:25.0 sec. and 3:40.0 sec. brought Andrews 5th place, Plummer 6th place and Brown 7th place.

In the 4x200m. relay the team of Janey O'Rourke, Jan Pipe, Betsy Carey and Marianne Drinkwater smashed the old Queen's record by 6 sec. in a 1:50.2 3rd place finish. All team member's wish to extend their sincerest appreciation to coaches Rolf Lund Curt and Sue Bolton and Brian Latta for their help in making this a very successful season. The women are indebted to manager Sheila Kirby for an excellent job while special thanks from the men goes out to Tasso Eracles whose handling of the manager's job, as well as tour guide of Toronto, was second to none.

Gaels prolific on field & track

The men's prolific performances came in the shot put as Kevin Thompson and John Ongro out-muscled the field to finish 1st and 2nd, with tosses of 13m. 85 and 13m. 35 respectively. Also in the field, John Darlington put together an outstanding triple jump of 14m. 10 to take 3rd, and later in the long jump Darlington added a 4th, with a leap of 6m. 86. Walt Simirski added an 8th, in the long jump with a jump of 5m. 46.

In the pole vault, Gary Tetzlaff equalled his personal best of 4m. 12(13'6") to take 4th, place despite the fact that his new pole proved too soft as he consistently bent it past 90degrees. In the men's high jump, another personal best was recorded as Mike Forrayeth had the bar cleared (1m. 90-6'3") to finish 4th. On his next jump at 6'5", which would have won the event, Forrayeth had the bar cleared easily only to nick it with his ankle on the way down.

On the track the men proved equally impressive as many personal bests and high placings were recorded. Sprinter Vic Gooding put together three good races in the 50m. to win his best, his semi-finals and eventually the final in a time of 5.9 sec. Gooding added a 3rd in the 300m. by clocking 35.5 sec. while teammate Cal Cochrane also ran a personal best of 37.3 sec. to finish 11th.

The 600m. competition saw Gerry Feeny of Toronto establish a new Canadian record of 1:18.4 sec. Queen's entrants Paul Stense and Marc Macaulay clocked identical 1:22.2 sec. to finish in a tie for 4th place. In a 50m. Ht race that resembled a wood chopping competition, Macaulay placed 5th. (7.3 sec.)

The 1000m. event saw Jeff Giles and Mark Henry finish 4th and 9th, with times of 2:33.1 and 2:39.9, respectively. The men's 1500m. saw Queen's vice-captain Bob MacCormack and Scott Ogilvie battling a classy field which included the Canadian record holder, Joe Sax of Toronto. Both finished with personal bests of 3:47.4 and 4:06.5

Scothorn leads Gals

The women's team enjoyed one of its most successful years in recent memory. Pam Scotthorn, who next week will be in Edmonton for the Nationals, took the gold in the shotput with a toss of 13m. 39. In other field events Marianne Drinkwater took a 4th, in the long jump with a leap of 4m. 73.

In the 50m. Betsy Carey showed excellent speed with a clocking of 6.8 sec. to finish in 4th, place. In the 300m. Jan Pipe ran well to finish 8th, in 43.7 sec. while teammate Carey was prominent again by placing 9th, in 44.2 sec.

In the 600m. rookie Mary Bousfield set a new Queen's record of 1:42.3 sec. to finish 3rd, while teammate Marianne Drinkwater also broke the old record by finishing in 1:44.3 sec. to take 5th, place. The Queen's trio of Lynn Andrews Sue Plummer and Ann Brown turned in excellent performances in both the 1500m. and 1000. competition to cap off a season which saw all three record personal bests. In the 1500 Andrews broke her own record by clocking 5:05.7 to finish 4th, while Plummer and Brown

Squash

The Queen's Squash team ended its season last weekend placing second to Western in the finals of the OUA competition. The week before the team beat out Toronto and York in the Eastern section which gave them a berth in the finals. The team consisted of Alex Dougal, Al Hayes, Stu Watt, Ian Barrett and Bob Moffat, all of whom had a highly successful season.

The Western contingent was led by Ian Shaw (three times North American Champ) along with four other accomplished players. Shaw easily won the No. 1 singles spot, however Toronto's number one player, who was away for the competition, might have given Shaw a run for his money. Alex Dougal is off to Bermuda to represent Jamaica in a tournament for the Islands and we wish him the best of luck. Thanks to Hugh Fisher, our hard working enthusiastic coach for a great season.

There's no violence in hockey!!!

Violence in Hockey

by Lyn Atwood
Journal Sports Editor

The Symposium on Violence on Thursday night was a whopping success, or would have been had the star-studded cast not also have included a very rude and long-winded representative from Queen's who called himself a moderator, Rick Grenow.

The organization required to bring together the rest of the panel (Clarence Campbell, Scott Morrison - referee in Chief, Carl Brewer - former hockey star, and Bill McMurtrie-lawyer) must have been challenging indeed. Congratulations to the PHESA committee (Stu Beck and Dave Foulds in particular) along with Asus and AMS for doing such a terrific job.

Scotty Morrison, hockey referee in chief and chairman of the Rules committee started the ball rolling with statements indicating that he does not believe that violence exists in the NHL as much as is actually portrayed by the media. He went on to say that statistics prove that penalties have greatly increased in the past year - and that this in turn indicates NOT an increase in violence but in fact that actually more of the violence is being checked - and that there is a tighter standard of rule importance; referees are acting more quickly to eliminate altercations.

He stated that "when somebody doesn't know what to say about the officiating they say it's inconsistent" and ended by describing the toughness of the referees training camp relating to the fact that the officials acknowledge that they have a great responsibility. He was very open and encouraged questions from the floor.

Clarence Campbell took the floor next and opened by stating that hockey is "fundamentally a game of violence" and that "without violence it wouldn't be hockey." He stated that they (hockey administration) have always recognized civil authority. (and to that I reply-when is the last time one could slug or jab somebody on the street without getting arrested)

He suggests that the question might be - Violence: do we approve it? Because the word condone suggests guilt and he has none. He told the audience that the system of control is extensive and expensive and that there are approximately ten situations a week which call for some disciplinary action from the administration (as opposed to the officials).

He also said (with heavy implications)-that there is a difference between pro and amateur hockey and that there is an attempt by some people to impose a standard on pro hockey which is not desirable to the National Hockey League.

He feels that basically the administration has managed to deal with excessive violence to the satisfaction of society (although none of the questions at the end reflected any such satisfaction). He admitted that young players do emulate their idols to some degree however compared to other things on television (and at least one other sport) he says hockey violence is a very mild form.

Carl Brewer, the former Toronto Maple Leaf got up to speak next and stated that in hockey there is aggressive body contact and some unnecessary violence (which he is strongly against) but that hockey is essentially non-violent.

He made mention of a radio talk show that he had been a guest on earlier that day and said that on the show on the calls in, only one name was mentioned-not Orr, Esposito or Dryden, but that of Dave Schultz and added "any resemblance Dave Schultz has to a hockey player is purely coincidental".

He stated that in the NHL, players test you and that his last ten years in hockey were essentially non-violent (which leaves one wondering about his first five years). He said that hockey is just a reflection of life and gave an example of the business world where if you back down you'll get intimidated and if you stand your ground they'll (hockey players) will stay away from you.

He ended by saying that body contact should exist -it's "good and healthy for all" and that excessive violence is unnecessary because it ruins the game; hockey is an art form and the long suffering hockey fan should see the best brand of hockey.

The final speaker of the four star panel was a lawyer who has been commissioned to do a study on the violence in hockey. Bill McMurtrie stated that sport can be both a positive influence and a negative influence and that it depends entirely on the environment surrounding the sport.

Right now hockey is at a crossroads. It presently is dominated by the pro ethic as stated by the late Vince Lombardi "winning isn't everything, it's the only thing". McMurtrie says that he thinks that's a sick attitude and speaks for a lot of us when he says that some things matter more than winning. He asks us to reflect for a moment upon sport. What is the purpose of sport?

He went on to say that hockey has always been dominated by the professionals and although it could be a lot worse-the situation is still in need of drastic changes.

Up until 1967 the CAHA couldn't change its rules without the approval of the NHL; the only way that Jr. 'A' hockey can get money is by sending players to the NHL therefore they will have the same standard of hockey-they can't be expected to behave differently.

He used examples of violence in other games. In football, (which is a very physical game) a cheap shot is branded not worthy of the game. In rugby the game is the most important thing. He believes that in hockey, players should regain some of their mutual respect for the other team, they should be able to sit down and drink with each other afterwards.

If a player just wants to play hockey-it's a virtually impossible in the NHL- one has to fight to stay in the league. He quotes from the public hearing transcript (from a person who has been in hockey for 50 years) of a coach telling his players-"if there's going to be a fight-you get the first shot!"

And he ended by referring to a survey which was taken among the younger kids in hockey-who when asked "what do you think is the most important thing?" 3 percent of them said winning; but when asked "what do you think your parents and coaches think is the most important thing?" a high percentage (over 75 percent) replied winning.

The next phase of the symposium- the 'questions from the floor' period was a sad display of Queen's ability to ask competent questions. In fact, most of the questions were not questions at all but comments which were not of a particularly high quality: better those people should have thought twice and spoken once- formulating some inquiries which should have taken advantage of the prestigious guests which were present on Thursday night.

All in all, there was a good crowd in attendance and the Symposium could be considered a success.

Lewis: society demands a personal commitment

by Doug Bonnell and Larry Woods

For David Lewis, modern society is "a very complex and complicated thing", so complex and so complicated that the inequalities and disparities it produces demand a personal commitment from every individual capable of exercising such a commitment.

The guest speaker at Wednesday's inter-Residence Council Banquet, Lewis maintained he could not envision a totally empirical, detached attitude towards society on the part of any person.

He remarked, "I don't believe social scientists who say they don't make normative judgments. I just don't believe it. They're no more social and political eunuchs than I am. Every person has his prejudices, every person has his predilections, every person has his background, every person has his hopes and aspirations for society. You can't be neutral."

Lewis views university graduates as too concerned with personal achievement, university as too removed and detached from its responsibility to society. He argues that every individual who improves his person through a university education has a duty and a responsibility to return something to the community.

"And the university graduate who gets the elitist idea that he and he alone did it, is doing himself and the community a disservice. He is living in a lie."

Lewis has not without advice on the political framework that this commitment should work through. In the remainder of his forty-minute speech he rambled through his own socialist background and the reasons behind his own particular political approach. (It was a speech requesting sacrifice, sacrifice on both a personal and a financial level and climaxed by the remark:

"A country that is so blessed with riches, is so blessed with beauty, is so blessed with the people that we have, has no excuse for unemployment, it has no excuse for poverty, it has no excuse for inequality, it has no excuse for deprivation of any kind!")

He views himself as an "angry man, not angry at what society has done for me, but what society hasn't done for others." It was a highly emotional speech filled with personal anger and frustration. It was a speech that called on each of us to "remove the users from the temple." It was a speech that demanded action.

"Year of the shaft" ends at general meeting

by Dan McClelland

"This was the year of the shaft", past Vice President Operations Peter Druexman told the group of people who attended the AMS annual general meeting on Monday night. Druexman outlined that many people, he felt, had been "shafted" over the past year. Druexman's address, one of the many year end reports given by the AMS executive and inner council members at the meeting, urged that "Outer Council stay out of the business end of the AMS and leave it to the business staff" who are more experienced in business problems.

Ending his post as Vice-President University Affairs and beginning another as the new President of the AMS, John Gray commented on the past year's goals of the executive. He admitted that "the objectives of consolidated finances and greater responsibility toward the community have not been overwhelmingly successful." Gray felt that "overcoming the AMS's image as the big business or the student service wing of the university administration will be difficult. If this can be accomplished, I feel that the AMS's biggest obstacle will be broken down; that being the lack of interest and involvement in all areas of AMS organized events."

The annual meeting featured the election of the new AMS Board of Directors. A slate of six candidates for the positions was uncontested. The new board includes John Gray, new President of the AMS; Ian Nordheimer, new Vice-President Operations; Robert Wood, past Campus Activities Commissioner; Alan Huehn, past External Affairs Commissioner; Lewis Greer, a professor in the Faculty of Commerce; and Heino Lillies, a professor in the Faculty of Law. Both Greer and Lillies served on the Board of Directors the past year: the first year of enlarged board of Directors. The Board of Directors was expanded from three members to six at the AMS annual general meeting a year ago.

A motion to donate $1500 from the AMS Reserve Fund to the Don Krestel Memorial Award Fund was passed at the general meeting. The fund, set up by the friends of the late Don Krestel is to be held in trust by Queen's University and only the capital shall be awarded yearly to qualifying Physical Education students; a tribute to former Physical Education student Donald Krestel.

Students will contribute $25 more in student interest fees for the 75-76 academic year in order to cover the costs of broadcasting Queen's away from home athletic activities on CFRC radio.

A move to adopt four foster children under the Foster Parents Plan was brought onto the floor at the meeting. The motion proposed that $900 be spent yearly out of the AMS Capital Reserve Fund to support the children through the Foster Parents Plan of Canada. The motion included a clause to force the corporation to undertake support of the children until 1985, should the AMS Executive or Outer Council decide to cease support.

Brock U. hosts "action" talks

by Les Gankrodger

Free transportation and accommodation are being provided to encourage your attendance at the Ontario Students Action Conference this weekend (March 7th, 8th and 9th) at Brock University. The workshops were initiated, and are supported by the OES. They include a variety of topics of interest to students.

The impact of the government's spending cutbacks on education, the new role of women in education, and the unionization of faculty are some of the areas of interest to be discussed. As well, problems related to student housing and student aid will be examined in the 'working papers' to be presented by representatives from across the province.

The conference which hopes to develop a province-wide strategy with regard to these and many more important matters, is open to all interested students, staff, faculty and community members who wish to attend. In addition, the AMS has offered to pay for the transportation of anyone who would like to participate in the workshops.

Because of the extensive funding, both from all universities and colleges in Ontario and by Brock University, the program promises to pose little strain on your budget. The total weekend fee will be $7.00. It should prove to be an informative and enlightening experience (no doubt a good time as well). If you're at all interested in participating, contact John Gray this afternoon (March 7th).

NDP Premier tells students to "bite bullet"

BRANDON (CUP) — NDP Premier Ed Schreyer, currently in power, has adopted an attitude towards a student's aid which runs counter to that of the federal NDP, who are currently out of power.

People want their water treatment plants and other things, not a better financial deal for students, he told a press conference in Brandon, Manitoba.

He said the idea of eliminating or even lowering tuition fees was hard to justify as a government priority. He cited water treatment plants as an example of a higher priority.

Schreyer also expressed a negative view of any changes in student aid regulations which would make funds available to students whose parents refused to support their education.

"If a parent who has the means is not interested in financing the education of his (her) children or ex-dependents, then I do not know why his (her) neighbour should be expected to finance it," he said.

"Nothing in life is easy," he added. Schreyer's less than sympathetic view of student aid runs counter to the official policy stance of the federal NDP, which supports making aid more available to students and an eventual elimination of tuition fees.

At their conference in early February the Alberta NDP also, called for the abolition of tuition fees.

Beer attracts 150 to Artsci 78 elections

by Glenn Mather

Elections were held last Tuesday night for the new executive of Artsci 78. A novel method was selected to encourage people to show up at Stirling B to exercise their vote: free cold beer supplied to all who came. The $90 tab for the refreshments was picked up by Artsci 78 year funds. And the plan was a success: roughly 150 appeared. "10 times the turn-out of Artsci 77" claimed the newly-elected publicity manager, Mike MacMillan. After the session in Stirling, the group retired to the Gordon Common Room, where they enjoyed chips and "the beer!"

U of A: Senior citizens get free tuition

EDMONTON (CUP) - The Alberta government has given in to the long standing student demand for free tuition and a living stipend - but you have to be a senior citizen to qualify.

This spring Alberta seniors will be able to take credit and noncredit courses at the University of Alberta at no cost, thanks to a grant of $20,000 from the provinces Council on Aging. Non-credit courses of special interest to senior citizens will be offered for a three-week period during May, including: Wills, Estates and other Finances; Living on a Reduced Income: the Phenomenon of Aging; and Indoor Gardening.

Also offered are more general interest courses in literature, creative writing, music appreciation, and contemporary Canadian issues.

Seniors can also take regular credit courses offered during the spring semester, providing that they can meet the usual university entrance requirements.

Tuition costs, room and board, and transportation will be provided free of charge to participating senior students.

COPR says RCMP on Queen's campus

by Brenda Annis

RCMP undercover units posing as students are present on the Queen's campus, said the five-man Commission on Police Reform (COPR), during a press conference Tuesday. The three-year-old Commission, sponsored by the Church of Scientology, has been in the city since Friday to investigate citizen-police relations.

The Commission bases its statement on complaints from students spoken to by a team of researchers. The students reported narcotic agents and student surveillances to be the primary offenders.

Kingston Chief of Police Smith denies any knowledge of these groups. EX RCMP officials, however, confirm the report and say that if an RCMP officer refuses the Campus assignment he is transferred from the Security and Intelligence Branch and risks losing his job.

To further substantiate their claims, the COPR cites the case of Chuck Edwards. Edwards, a student at Queen's in '69-'70, came under investigation by the RCMP for his political leanings. In a survey of over 100 people, 30 reported harsh police treatment, and practically all of these did not wish to make any formal complaint for fear of police reprisals.

The basic concern of the country-wide tour is to gather support for the Freedom of Information Act in Canada. At present there is no legislation allowing a citizen to view his police file and to correct any false information in that file. The danger in this is that false rumours or charges that have not resulted in conviction may appear in the file, and be distributed among other police agencies and courts, undermining the basic human rights of an individual.

In the last 18 months there have been 65 documented cases of false information circulated in this manner, said the COPR. They are distributed through the RCMP, the F.B.I., the CIA and also through Interpol.

The three year old Commission is sponsored by the Church of Scientology, who began the investigation when they found themselves blacklisted along with other groups such as the National Council of Churches, and the Southern Christian Leadership headed by the late Dr. Martin Luther King.

Kingston is the ninth city visited in the 26 city tour.

Ottawa U. deans lose lunch money

OTTAWA (CUP) - The Ontario Government's campaign to get universities to "lighten their belts" has had its effect at the University of Ottawa. Academic Deans there may soon be able to do just that.

The university's budgeting committee took one look at the past practice of paying for the Dean's membership to the exclusive Cercle Universitaire Luncheon Club and said: "This must stop".

Now the Deans will have to pay $200 a year out of their own pockets to continue membership in that exclusive club.

The top five university administrators will continue to get free memberships. "Somebody has to entertain visitors" explained vice-rector Maurice Chagnon, who stays on the free list.

The $3,200 saving resulting from the deans' lunch cutback leaves only $1,996,800 for the U of O to shave from next year's budget to make it balance.

Submitted by organizers of AMS International Women's Day

On Saturday Mar. 8, 1975 from 1-4pm in Ellis Hall on the third floor, the AMS celebrates International Women's Day. With a theme of Co-existence or No Existence, our purpose in running this series of workshops is to try and deal with specific issues rather than general topics as a form of consciousness raising. Events will begin with a film entitled "Women on the March" from 1:00 to 2:00 pm. Workshops will run from 2-4pm, and in the evening at 8pm in Dunning. Holiday Theatre Five interprets women as seen through the theatre. The main topic areas to be discussed in the workshops are as follows:

Men's Liberation
The discussion will centre around the meaning of sexual politics. Such things as: What is Men's Liberation? What relation do men have to Women's Liberation? How can men break down stereotypes in terms of roles, attitudes, and language? Why are men afraid women will lose their femininity? What relationship does Gay Liberation have to Women's Liberation? How do the problems of the gay male compare to those of women?

Old Traditions and Attitudes at Queen's
Should Szize-Q be supported? Are Szize-Q and Candlelighting exploiting the female? Should or shouldn't they be abolished? Why haven't many of the Status of Women Report Recommendations been implemented? Are Queen's female faculty being discriminated against? Why is it that although the enrolment of men and women at Queen's is approaching parity, the budget of the Women's Intercollegiate Athletics is less than half of that of the Men's Intercollegiate Athletics?

Could it be due to the fact that Men's athletics received a greater sum of money for 1) athletic equipment? 2) training meals (pre-season and during the season)? 3) minor officials?

Women and the Labour Force
RESOLVED THAT: It is imperative that the Canadian Government and the people of Canada recognise the contribution towards production and growth GNP of the Canadian economy of homemakers.

Women and the Law
Session 1 2:30pm Family and Property Law Marriage contracts which create rights with respect to wage divisions, divisions of child care, etc. should be enforceable in the courts.

When a marriage breaks up, a spouse should be entitled to maintenance in order to regain the skills necessary to support him/herself if he/she lost those skills due to the role he/she assumed during the marriage. Fault shall play no part in determining maintenance.
The concept of illegitimacy with respect to children should be abolished.

Session 2 2:30 pm Abortion Law
RESOLVED THAT: The development of safer contraceptives, their distribution to all people of fertile age who request them and the provision of information on birth control, V.C., sterilization and abortion.
RESOLVED THAT: The removal of the abortion Laws from the criminal code making abortion an individual decision

RESOLVED THAT: The establishment through a cost-sharing programme by the Federal and Provincial governments of Medical Clinics where the above information can be obtained and where women who wish to terminate an unwanted pregnancy may do so.

Session 3 3:40 pm Labour Law and the Human Rights Code
RESOLVED THAT: Legislation be passed guaranteeing paid maternity leave with the right to return to the same job with accumulated seniority.

RESOLVED THAT: The discriminatory clauses in legislation that effectively eliminate women from certain job categories be abolished.
RESOLVED THAT: The Ontario and Federal government recognise equal pay for work of equal value. Equal value being determined by the parameters of skills, value and responsibility.

Session 2 3:40 pm Rape, Prostitution and Criminal Law
RESOLVED THAT: The burden on the prosecution is already high enough that the accused is adequately safeguarded and that the confirmation through further evidence requirements of non-consent, intent to rape, identity and non-marriage of parties be dropped.

RESOLVED THAT: Rape should not be considered a separate offence and that the law outline only various degrees of assault. This might reduce the stigma attached to the offence for both victim and offender, and the inequalities between men and women.
RESOLVED THAT: The burden of proof on the present issue lie with the defendant and not the victim.

RESOLVED THAT: Evidence of the victim's past sexual history is of no relevance as to the determination of whether the accused actually raped the victim, and should not be allowed.

RESOLVED THAT: The sections of the Criminal Code pertaining to the problems of prostitution be repealed. The state does not belong in the bedroom of consenting adults. Prostitution is not and never has been a crime or a threat to society and is often enforced by plainclothes men to entrap women more often than by plainclothes women. Who seduces whom is a difficult and impossible question of fact and there is no rational purpose in punishing one party to the bargain and not the other.

Indecent assault on a female is punishable by five years of imprisonment, indecent assault on a male is punishable by ten years imprisonment.
RESOLVED THAT: The punishment for indecent assault be the same whether the victim is male or female.

A juvenile delinquent is defined as a "child under 16, who violates a provision of the Criminal Code or who is guilty of sexual immorality or any similar form of vice". It is unheard of to charge a teenage boy because of sexual activity but not uncommon to charge a teenage girl under this provision for the same activity, find her guilty and therefore send her to a training school.
RESOLVED THAT: The phrase "or who is guilty of sexual immorality or any similar vice" be deleted from the definition of a juvenile delinquent.

If we could, we would.

We think it's only fair to warn you that Henninger doesn't taste at all like the other Canadian beers with German names. That's because Henninger is the genuine article. A German beer, brewed from an authentic German recipe, right here in Ontario.

And German beer simply doesn't taste like Canadian beer.

Henninger. Das schmeckt!

We've imported malt and yeast from Germany. We've used the same brewing time.

It's doubly fermented and naturally carbonated. The taste is as different as plain old boiled veal is from wienerschnitzel.

You've been warned. Henninger tastes different. And it costs very little more than regular beer.

One man's politics

by Doug Bonnell

"Well Doug, what do you want to talk about this week?"

"Flora Macdonald."

"Again?"

"Why not: I haven't mentioned her for a good two weeks."

"Oh at least that. And you know, ever since November when her possible run for the leadership was viewed as almost futile, Flora Macdonald has emerged as one of the front runners for the post. There are of course a number of reasons for the increasingly positive attitude towards her candidacy. Ever since July she has maintained a high profile within the Conservative party, appearing at numerous organizational events, conferences and conventions. Her experience as a skilled backroom organizer and the political connections she has made as the former Executive-Secretary of the party, as one of the founding members of the Committee for an Independent Canada, and as a close associate of both Robert Stanfield and party president Michael Meighan have been instrumental in creating a viable political machine if and when she decides to make the move. And then there's the milk snatcher."

"Who?"

"Margaret Thatcher, the breakthrough Mrs. Thatcher has made in winning the leadership of the British Conservative party has had astounding effects. In winning the support of a party dominated by overweight, elitist businessmen with three-piece suits, country estates and Irish setters named Carmichael, she has, in one fell swoop, eliminated the political stigma of being female. Second, her win has given Ms. Macdonald an incredible amount of free press, an event the former administrator of the Queen's Political Science department has not been lax in capitalizing on.

During the past few weeks, Flora appears to have successfully shifted the nature of her public image away from being the "woman candidate", a popular but somewhat shallow approach. Having established a positive recognition factor, Ms. Macdonald is now talking about the issues which affect her deeply. In her latest 900-mile stint across Quebec and Ontario she dealt directly with the problem of political alienation, with the cynicism among all levels of society towards politics and politicians and towards an apparently insurmountable bureaucracy, with the loneliness of the aged and the rural Canadian feel towards a society in which they once made input and from which they received positive feedback. It is a concern highly reminiscent of the romantic radicalism of the sixties and highly relevant to Canadian society today.

"Any predictions?"

"I personally believe that Flora's chances of winning the country are better than winning the leadership of the party. But if she runs, a possibility that grows more and more likely with each passing day, I think she'll come close, remarkably close, and, with a bit of luck, she might even pull it off."

"Thanks Doug. And remember folks, you read it here first in the Queen's Journal."

Torture

Vietnam: man in a cage

An Opinion
By D. Lampert

It is comforting to accept the idea that the war in Indochina is over, and it is an idea that governmental agents and euphemistic press reports would have us believe. Yet the tortures of war continue. They centre around the tiger cages, the infamous boxes of the island of Con Son which originally held political prisoners.

A model of the Tiger Cage will be on display in the Macintosh-Corry student street on March 10, 11 and 12. Nearby will be a table with information about the situation in Vietnam, and suggestions of what we, as individuals and Canadians, can do to help. Finally, on Wednesday March 12, Andrew Brewin M.P. will speak in Mac-Corry Room 201B at 8.00 p.m. and the film "South Vietnam: A Question of Torture" will be shown.

For two months in the fall of 1974, a project was set up on the central steps of the United States Capitol, called the Tiger Cage Vigil and Fast. It centred upon a replica of the tiger cages, cages which are approximately 8 feet x 5 feet x 5 feet concrete boxes with iron grillwork on the top. Prisoners are placed in them, shackled by one hand and both feet. They are chained to the steel bars in such a way that they must sit or lie down; atrophy of leg muscles and paralysis are the nearly inevitable results.

The Tiger Cage project had people sit, in shifts, shackled into the replica tiger cage. Visitors had little choice but to view the display along with the marble splendour of the Capitol.

During the last week of the 9-week Tiger Cage Vigil and Fast, three participants remained shackled into the cage, fasting from Monday morning to Saturday noon. Capitol Police, following a Justice Department ruling, insisted they not sleep. There was real suffering in the Capitol tiger cages: there is real suffering in the cages in Vietnam.

We urge you to see the tiger cage model and the film, to think of what they mean, and to help in whatever way you can to encourage man to treat his fellow as he would be treated himself.

B. Ed. students unite

SASKATOON (CUP): Students from the education faculties in the western provinces met Feb. 21 to 23 to establish a federated body to help solve their common problems.

The result was a concrete proposal for a Western Canadian Education Alliance which will now be sent to each education college society for ratification by March 15.

Leeway for B.I.U.'s

Dear Editor:

I was very surprised by the response of Ben Wilson, Deputy Minister of Colleges and Universities, to my question at the panel discussion of financial constraint. I pointed out that incomes rose as prices rose and the tax on the increase in income is at a much higher rate than the average rate for the lower portion of the income. Consequently the Ontario Government revenues should have been rising far faster than the rise in the consumer price index. I concluded that there ought to be enough leeway to increase the B.I.U. as fast as the consumer price index.

Mr. Wilson shook his head and gave some figures which I did not hear. Perhaps they were to show that Ontario Government revenues have risen very little. But if so, why?

Yours sincerely,

Dr. John Ursell
Department of Mathematics

Housing study

Dear Editor:

I was disappointed in the editorial comment on student housing in the last issue of the Journal. In the selection of a new student accommodation design, speed is of the essence. A design selected today could not be built in less than two years, because of the procedure involved in securing funding, formulating user policy, providing detailed plans calling tenders and, finally, construction. The design selection process consists of examining several very rough proposals and weeding out those which are too expensive, not functional, or not harmonious with the city (or university) environment. Naturally, to avoid raising false hopes and debate on redundant proposals, the responsible bodies of university remove the unfeasible proposals and attempt to find financing before striking a user's committee to develop detailed user policy and plans. The weeding out stage is underway now, but no funds have been found.

Sarah Yarnell shows a distinct lack of confidence in the student representatives serving on the committee. Obviously, while the students are not in a majority, their opinions will be considered seriously. It must also be remembered that the university must have the final say in the matter as Queen's must arrange the financing, administer and cover losses of any project. However, before any proposal is sent into the Senate, it will be worked on by 4 students, including a student senator and the president of the AMS (who would represent the views of the Outer Council). Before it is approved in principle by the board of Trustees it will also be viewed by 14 student senators, (including the V-P of the AMS), 2 past presidents of the AMS and the Rector. I regard the suggestion that any proposal should be given final approval by Outer Council, which has shown a disturbing interest in form rather than content, to be a mistake in view of the time restraints involved and to be a slight against the student representatives working on the project involved.

Yours sincerely,

Dave Gordon
Student Senator

Essay contest

Dear Editor:

About six weeks ago, the AMS Education Commission decided to run an essay contest. The topic was "how does one justify a university education to himself and to the university?" and all entries were to have been read by 3 judges, Dr. Deutsch, Principal Watts and Tony Wolman. Well the idea intrigued me and I wrote such an essay and delivered it as asked. Today I received it in the mail accompanied by a short note to the effect that there had been little response to the contest and it was decided to cancel the deal (chances were I was the only one who entered).

This bothers me a great deal. Really I would have been happy just to have someone say they read it - but I'm sure no one did.

They should have stated at the beginning that if not enough response was received, all essays will be returned, unread, and no prize given. If it becomes known that this is how the AMS runs essay contests who is going to enter them from now on?

Yours Truly,

Andrew Mason

'Nuff Sed

Dear Editor:

As the student member of the Sennut special committee on special occasions, events and other wasteful expenditures pertaining to 30,000,000th anniversaries and the like, it is my pleasure and privilege to make the following announcement. Few of us may not realize it, most of us probably have ignored it, but this week marks the 30,000,000th anniversary of the sediment that now forms the limestone that we all so luckily tread upon. In recognition of that fact that this institution would not be the institution it now is, if not for our good fortune in being sedded upon 30,000,000 years ago, the Sennut is planning a special day in memory of this event. Everyone is invited to spend Mar. 7 pretending they are a layer of sedimentary stone.

Sincerely

Women at Queen's coexistence or no-existence

then ...

In 1889 Queen's University established the first medical course for women. At the time it may have caused more problems than it solved. The following is an edited version of a story entitled "The Idiotable Lady Doctors" by Carliotta Hacker which may have been the first indication of not only feminism but possibly as well, the first student revolt to take place in Canada as well as on the Queen's campus.

When Elizabeth set out on the road to become a doctor, she had male as well as female support. This was partly because of her character. She was a self-assured, pretty girl with natural wit and charm, and men found themselves helping her, not because she fought them into the ground, but simply because they liked her. They also admired her: for all her prettiness, her intentions were obviously serious.

As a young girl she felt no driving urge to fight 'male man' for her privileges. Male man had always been rather kind to her, and besides, a certain number of privileges had come to her naturally, simply because she was an intelligent and attractive child of a well-to-do family. In the 1870's when Elizabeth was first making enquiries about medical schools, there were no facilities for women in Canada. But changes were under way by 1879, when Elizabeth took the matriculation exams on the Council of the College of Physicians and Surgeons (her first step towards studying medicine). Eighteen seventy-nine was the year Queen's University decided that, in future, it would take a few women - and one of Elizabeth's matriculation examiners was from Kingston. He was Mr. Knight, 'a capital man' who was impressed by young Miss Smith and told her that Queen's Medical Faculty was prepared to start a special summer course for women, provided there were sufficient applicants to make it worthwhile.

Two other girls were present at the matriculation exams. One was Augusta Stowe, who was up for the second time, having failed math on her first attempt, and the other was a delicate young girl called Emma Parmenter - one of Dr. Trout's proteges, who seems to have had a firm spirit but failing health. Poor Miss Parmenter was very nervous and didn't pass, but both Augusta and Elizabeth came through with honours. Augusta was already looking to it as a possible place to study, but Elizabeth away determined to follow up on the Queen. Even if only three students presented themselves for the summer course, it would be worth while for Queen's was aware that it was making history. The medical course for women, which was opened in April, 1880, was going to be the first ever given in Canada.

It started very pleasantly. Elizabeth arrived in Kingston she was well most cordially by the professors, four of whom given up their summer holidays especially for one of the girls. They made her feel all the welcome by affecting delighted surprise at both, and modesty.

Elizabeth was full of surprises

They had, one of them explained, Miss Smith, Organizer, would be a maid. Elizabeth blushed demurely, then quickly wrote home to her family telling of her flattering reception - and also telling them to turn up their eyes and cough skeptically trying to be demure and modest. In the midst of all this demure rustling around Kingston, booking boarding house where one of the other women was staying ($2.50 a week) buying a copy of Gray's Anatomy ($6.50), paying her registration fee ($2.00), and also buying four notebooks, a box of surgical tools, four knives, a hook, a pair of scissors, and two forceps (total $3.00). Even if her father did have money, it was being carefully spent.

Soon Elizabeth was making friends with the other two students, Alice Skimmen McGillivray and Elizabeth Robb Beatty. Elizabeth liked Mrs. McGillivray immediately: she was so bright and sprightly. Alice McGillivray was about nineteen years old at the time and had been married more than a year. Elizabeth described her as a 'piquant, jolly little brick' but 'thoroughly womanly and sensible'.

She also regarded Miss Beatty as a 'brick', but not quite such a jolly one. Miss Beatty was older than the other two, of a more serious temper - she had already decided to be a missionary - and apparently she looked as if she was ready to die in harness. Elizabeth cast her in the role of the 'old maid', the role she herself was so glad not to have been cast in by the professors: 'I tell you, there's the girl that would make a noble wife - but she's a man-hater. She's a master of sarcasm, a wrestler in argument, possesses a fund of wit, quiet, steady, true, would go through a mountain rather than go round it.'

They were an unlikely threesome, each with a different temperament, but all feminists at heart and all determined to get those two letters: M.D. They stood their first year very well, bracing themselves to witness their first operation, to take their first dissection class, to observe the gruesome treatment which had to be given to some of the patients at the lunatic asylum and the hospital. They were determined to be as unmoved as they imagined young men to be. Frailty, thy name was not going to be woman.

As a matter of fact, they were getting through their course far more competently than the normal first year male students. With delighted enthusiasm, the professors praised the girls, but they were a little appalled at the speed with which these pupils were learning. Some days their classes ran from eight in the morning till seven in the evening, and still they put in a good four hours studying before going to bed. They were doing too much work!

In the autumn of 1880, Queen's would be taking women for the first time in its regular classes (a result of the 1879 decision on co-education). There would just be a handful of girls at first, some of whom would be studying Arts, but it did mean that the University was now fully open to women. This being the case, Elizabeth asked the Registrar if her trio could sign on for second year medicine in October - instead of having to wait for the resumption of their special course in the spring. After some delay it was decided that since only two new women were interested in attending the second session of the special course, it would be cancelled. So in October, 1881, the girls joined the men's class. This meant that they lost a year's studies, which caused them considerable annoyance.

When the first women had entered Queen's the previous year, their arrival hadn't sparked any resentment from the male students. They were actually welcomed, even if this seemed, at times, slightly patronizing. Despite competition among the young men of Kingston to court Elizabeth, she wouldn't allow them more than a nibble. She had come to Kingston to get her degree and nothing was going to deflect her from it. First and foremost, she wanted to be a doctor. It looked as if she would become one with ease, and without any opposition: by the end of the 1881-82 session, both staff and students were complimenting each other on the success of this experiment in medical co-education. It just showed what could be done if people behaved sensibly. Very true. But unfortunately the most responsible students graduated at the end of the session, and in the fall their seats were filled by a distinctly irresponsible group of freshmen.

The session began badly - physiology lectures in particular became a form of torture. Dr. Fenwick, the physiology lecturer, had been pleasant and easy the previous year, but he had had some disagreement with the Faculty and had decided to take it out on the women - possibly because the Faculty supported the women. Whatever the cause, he had done a complete 'volte-face' and was now saying that he had no respect for women who studied medicine, and would not have them in his house.

Although other classes were conducted in a more kindly and orderly manner, the student atmosphere had changed. The women had become scapegoats. However, they fought back! When, for the umpteenth time, the offensive Dr. Fenwick leered at the students, and said, 'This reminds me of an anecdote the young ladies rose in a body, walked quietly out of the classroom, and went straight to the Registrar's office. The Registrar as a kindly man, and he tried to settle the matter amicably, calming the young ladies and reasoning with the young men. But he didn't succeed because while he was still trying to smooth over the whole affair and unrumple all the feathers, a letter appeared in the newspapers, presenting the men's viewpoint, and the whole affair became public.

Canada's first student revolt here

Soon Dr. Fenwick was also talking to the Press, maintaining that he had said nothing offensive and that anyway he had to garble his lectures when ladies attended them. This became the main platform of the male students: that, since women had been present, the more embarrassing subjects were not being taught in sufficient detail. The men weren't getting their money's worth. It wasn't true, but it sounded convincing, and it became the men's battle cry.

By this time the dispute had developed into a full-scale war, possibly the first student revolt to take place in Canada. And it wasn't so very different from recent student riots. It was more orderly, but there was a familiar ring to some of the demands. Although the primary demand was that women should leave the college, the students were also claiming administration rights, saying that since they paid their fees to the college, they ought to have a say in its management. Then the students delivered an ultimatum: if the Faculty didn't get rid of the women the men would leave and move in a

...and now

Queen's has a reputation as being a conservative university, and also the most sexist, according to the Women's Civil Rights group associated with the Canadian Association of University Teachers. There are statistics which, in relation to the national averages, would indicate that such a sexist tendency does exist.

A university is supposed to have a liberalizing effect on one's perceptions. In relation to the liberal concept of the university, the sexism practiced here is even less justifiable than that in a non-university setting. 'The intellectuals and scholars here are supposed to be the more intelligent members of this body to Trinity Medical School in Toronto.

This threat was too much for the Faculty. Queen's couldn't afford to lose its entire medical school - and it would certainly do so if it didn't back down, because Trinity had agreed to accept the striking medics. Yet how could one turn out these hard-working girls, who had already gone so far towards their degrees?

All along, the city of Kingston had staunchly supported the girls, and now a group of prominent citizens including a number of ex-mayors, managed to bring about a compromise. On their side, the students would be allowed to win their point - no more women would be accepted - but the present women would not be expelled, they would be allowed to stay on at Queen's until they graduated, taking their classes separately from the men.

It was an uneasy compromise, a truce rather than a peace, and both Faculty and women students were therefore relieved when they heard the first rumblings of the move to start a women's college in Toronto. And when the Toronto planners reached a deadlock, because of the disagreement about having women on the staff, she was transferred to Kingston, why, naturally, she was welcomed with as much enthusiasm as gratitude.

Besides, it was most fitting that Queen's should sponsor a women's medical college. Queen's had, after all, provided the first Canadian medical course for women, even if the course hadn't been entirely successful. And now Queen's would be able to fulfil its obligation to these women students and see them through to graduation. It would be able to continue to educate women in medicine.

The first woman student to register at Queen's was an Elizabeth H.D. Le Lievre de St. Iteny. Ms. de St. Remy was the headmistress of a girls' school in Kingston and in 1876 asked the Senate to allow girls, upon her recommendation to attend classes at Queen's. On Oct. 13, 1876, the Senate granted her request and fees were set at $7 and $3 respectively for chemistry and logic, the classes desired. Ms. de St. Remy herself was the first to take advantage of this opportunity and on Feb. 1, 1876, registered for a course in Logic. She was the 936th student, but her image was somewhat tarnished by the fact that she did not come back for a second year.

society. They are supposed to have access to knowledge about the real world, and to see world problems in a clear, rational way. Or at least be critical of dysfunctional attitudes."

Unfortunately, the universities of this country have not seen fit to be in the vanguard of social change, and Queen's is managing to keep to the rear quite well.

"If you happen to be a female student here, and you suffer from dysmenorrhea (painful menstruation), you may meet the same doctor at Student Health Service that I did last year - the one who dispensed the age-old advice: 'You'll be just fine after your first child'. If you protest, as I did, that you might want to go into law or graduate studies or some other programme which means that you will not be having children for quite some time, you might just get that other bit of age-old advice: 'Women should stay home and have babies. Then you'll be fine'. If you sit there and glare, as I did, he'll get a little nervous and ask if you're one of those women's lib types."

The inside of the outside

For those of us who have only "driven past" those penal institutions on the landscape, Peter Madden's play "The Night No-one Yelled" will reveal with stark insight that shadowed area below human dignity. Humiliation is a curious space. We are forced by Valerie Tocco's clever design, which intermingles seats and prison cells, into that dissecting area.

The Beggers Workshop Theatre of Montreal, under the capable direction of Peter Duffy, has brought Madden's taut, deeply emotional, and often humorous exploration into a viable working form.

Madden, himself a former inmate of Collin's Bay Penitentiary, is a disarmingly cheery Irishman who has devoted himself to a life of crime since the age of 14. Having been a prisoner for a good portion of the past 20 years, he speaks from experience.

It is an involving, frequently brilliant production, certainly one of the more important contributions of the Performing Arts Office to Kingston.

"The Night No-one Yelled" will be performed Thursday at 8:30 p.m., Friday at 7:30 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. and Saturday at 7:30 and 9:30 p.m. Tickets are $3.50 general, and $2.50 students and senior citizens, and are available from the Performing Arts Box Office in the Agnes Etherington Art Centre.

168 deletions

The CIA: And the Cult of Intelligence by Victor Marchetti and J. D. Marks

by Tony Davis

For many years the Central Intelligence Agency in the United States has been engaged in clandestine activities in numerous foreign countries. Their express purpose has been to mold or warp the political or economic conditions of these countries to suit American interests. Such has been suspected of the CIA since its inception in 1947 with President Truman's National Security Act: to prove these allegations has been the problem.

The CIA's "right" to interfere was almost taken for granted by the American executive branches and only the White House approved and discussed CIA policy. The consent of Congress or the awareness of the public was never taken into consideration. A number of CIA fiascoes, the Gary Powers U-2 incident over Russia and the Bay of Pigs blunder brought to light some of the incompetencies which the agency was virtually unaccountable for.

John Marchetti, formerly a CIA executive and John Marks, formerly of the U.S. State Department, collaborated to bring the public an expose of CIA activities. But before the work even neared publication, the CIA had a restraining order placed on Marchetti's research in the interest of "national security". The result of court action of Marchetti with the help of the Civil Liberties Union brought the book to publication. But not without certain deletions -- in fact there are 168. The case still continues over the right to publish these added details.

From training Tibetan refugees during the 1950's in the U.S. to fight against the Chinese, to its incipient involvement in Chilean politics, culminating in the overthrow of the Marxist Allende in 1973, the CIA has had no qualms about interfering in neutral or enemy lands.

Marchetti challenges the right of the American government to permit such an organization to influence foreign affairs, often to the detriment of the American people. Marchetti claims the public has the right to know.

From Russia and the communist threat to Asia, Africa and Latin America, the CIA has had free reign to operate. John Kennedy had been convinced of the possibility of overthrowing Castro, and he accepted the advice of the CIA. The operation failed, and though Kennedy at first denied any knowledge of CIA activities, he eventually faced up to it. Even Truman found the CIA was able to act without reporting, and he had brought the agency into being.

The CIA: And the Cult of Intelligence is filled with telling statements, regardless of the deletions which occur throughout the book. The deletions themselves point to the CIA's ability to throw its weight around effectively -- of course in the interests of national security. But as Marchetti would ask "in whose interests?"

The CIA: And the Cult of Intelligence is an informative book. It is unprecedented in that it was censored before it came to press. It is a book that should be read and acted upon -- a revolutionary work indeed.

Many thanks to Smith-Hill bookstore, 193 Princess St., for their generous donation of this book for review.

One hell of a good play

by John Frizzell
Chronicles number 28, a production of William Butler Yeats' play Purgatory, opened Tuesday evening to an enthusiastic house. The evening was divided into two parts: an introductory lecture on Yeats as a prologue, and the play itself.

The lecture covered the salient points of Yeats' life and development as a poet, and included a sensitive reading of some of Yeats' poetry by Banata Rubess. Rubess, who was particularly at ease with Yeats' later works, gave a stimulating, if rather lengthy, presentation.

The play opened with a prepared and eager audience, wooed by effectively chosen strains of Debussy, squinting into the darkness ahead. The lights brightened to reveal two raised discs, a representation of Yeats' ideas of the separation of old and new. The aspects of design in the production were consistently true to Yeats. The lighting was simple and richly coloured, emphasizing the emotional expression, and background was a velvety blackness. The visual picture, produced by the separated and suspended actors and the lighting, was a successful depiction of the title, Purgatory.

The Old Man and the Boy were played by Russ Waller and Eric Hughes. The performers were costumed in heavy robes and masks, which emphasized the symbolic nature of their roles, and presented them with challenging problems in presentation.

Russ Waller was marvellous; his movements were muscular and sharp, his voice was entrancing; his powers of description elucidated the text. Eric Hughes was an excellent partner, sensitive and responsive, providing an intelligent reading.

It was certainly one of the most conversation-worthy productions in the Chronicles series this year. Larry Moore has taken a difficult script and produced a smooth and novel production.

That students directed and produced the production, need not be mentioned; it is of no value as an excuse, and none is needed.

This Chronicles production will conclude with two performances tonight at 7:30 and 9:30. Admission is free.

Exceptional jazz

Herbie Mann
Neggae
Atlantic Records

by Chris Oavies

It appears that Herbie Mann has come full circle in his career, with the release of his latest album, Neggae. A stunning mix of Latin-rock, and distinct Afro-American beat, and superb musicianship from Mick Taylor, Albert Lee, Pat Neillol and the Tommy McCook Band, combine to make Neggae the finest jazz flute album since London Underground. The last time Mann used this specific style was some twenty years ago.

Mann's first recordings under his own name came out in 1955. His music today is fresh, and what's more, spares us the slick studio-musician-like runs of the Moe Koffman set. He obviously refuses to musically castrate himself for the sake of cheap listening.

Only recently has the flute gained acceptance as a jazz voice. Mann's flirting with Latin flute playing emerged on records during 1957. He played the only wind instrument in a nine piece jazz and Latin percussion section headed by Art Blakey. During the 60's there were influences of Turkey, Eastern Europe, and other cultures on Mann's music. There were also the influence of increasing commercial success and popularity. Mann came up with Memphis Underground in 1968, changing his geographical and musical liaisons. It became a smash hit on jazz and soul charts and even on the pop single charts. Then in 1971, with David Spinoza and the late Duane Allman accompanying him, he released, in my opinion, his most powerful album ever, Push, Push. Totally unassuming, it can move with the scope and dynamism of its selections.

This brings us to Neggae, and to finding the Mann of old deeply into that unmistakable beat which depends so heavily on stable rhythm and bass back-up. The McCook Band hardly need reminding that they're good. Gladstone Anderson on piano is especially impressive.

"My Girl" by William Robinson and Ron White, constitutes the whole of one side, and a basic six note bass progression is hammered out for over eighteen minutes. Mann, with Taylor and Lee on guitar, while maintaining precision, elicits real variations. Flutter-tonguing done well and in moderation is a pleasure to listen to, and this he does flawlessly. However, the keys to the success of any jazz wind player are anticipation and breathing; Mann makes both sound very natural. Arranged by Herbie Mann, "Rivers of Babylon" is a short traditional love song that allows the McCook Band to shine. The production of it leaves something to be desired, however, as the intrinsic drum part aggravatingly fades in and out. The final cut is "Swingin' Shepherd Blues". Koffman wrote it, and only Mann can play it.

Mann is quite firm in asserting that his interest over the years has been in playing the kind of music which he found interesting, and enjoyable. "It is easy to say I have sold out (to the jazz scene), but I think it is a much bigger lie to not do what you do best, only to satisfy someone else. That, I think, in truth, is selling out. I know what I can do and I have always wanted to feel and play certain kinds of music."

Mann has been experimenting, innovating, and creating, while at the same time defying critics, peers and trends. Neggae is no exception - it is merely exceptional.

Post-Graduate Studies In FORESTRY at The University of Toronto

Are you interested in pursuing research?
Improving your managerial expertise?
Teaching at institutions of higher learning?

Are these interests centred around the forest and related environment?
If yes, then take advantage of post-graduate studies in Forestry at the University of Toronto.

We offer M.Sc. and Ph.D. degrees.

Our program starts in September and you should apply as soon as possible. If you wish to be considered for financial assistance, make sure your application reaches us as soon as possible. A number of scholarships to a maximum of $5,000 are available.

Qualifications for admission are a Bachelor's degree from an accredited University with at least "B" standing or its equivalent in the final year. Your degree does not have to be in forestry, but your scholastic record must indicate ability to do graduate work.

We welcome students in the following areas:

Forest Ecology	Tree Physiology
Silviculture	Entomology
Genetics	Wildlife Management
Pathology	Land Use Planning
Fire Science	Mensuration
Outdoor Recreation	Wood Science
Timber Harvesting	Timber Engineering
Forest Products	Urban Forestry
Soils and other specialties as they relate to natural resource use, including:
Management	Economics
Policy	Operational Research

For more information, write to:

Tindall successor sought

With veteran head football coach Frank Tindall now entering the final year of an illustrious 28-year career at Queen's, Principal Ronald Watts has announced the establishment of an Advisory Selection Committee to search for a successor to "The Mentor". Law Professor Heino Lilles, who many Queen's fans will better remember as a superb fullback during the glory years of the late 1960's, has been named to head the committee.

Other local members of the committee include Dave Hadden, the Gaels' offensive co-captain last season, Professor Jake Edwards, Director of Men's Intercollegiate Athletics, Dr. Don MacIntosh, Head of the School of Physical and Health Education, Professor D. B. McLay of the Department of Physics and Phil Hamilton, MEds 77, members of the Men's Intercollegiate Athletic Committee, and Dr. Hal Dunlop, a member of the Kingston Alumni Association who has had a longstanding interest in Queen's football.

As well, Lou Bruce, an Ottawa alumnus and former pro star with the Roughriders, and two members of the Board of Trustees, Mr. E. G. A. Jorgensen of Toronto and Mrs. Mary Collins of Sudbury, were named to the Advisory group.

All members of the Queen's community are urged to offer their comments and suggestions on this matter to the committee.

Bews News

Hockey: On Semi-final play Arts '77 was able to hang on to a one goal lead to defeat Comm. '77 4-3. The game was very well played, few penalties were called and end to end action with the lead held by Arts '77 and tied each time by Comm. '77. However time did run out for the Commerce boys and Arts '77 advanced to meet the undefeated Arts '76 team.

Tuesday night saw the first of the best of three final games played. Arts '76 took the early lead on Will Kennedy's slapshot, but Arts '77 soon tied the game on a power play. In the second period Arts '76 were able to exert pressure on the Arts '77 team, however, goaltender John Lloyd was more than equal to the task. He played a sensational game with the only goal being a low slapshot by Tom Hamilton. The second period ended with Arts '76 leading 2-1.

The third period again saw good goaltending by John Lloyd and his opposite for Arts '76 Raj Anand. It was a thrilling game but the final score was 3-2 for Arts '76. The second game of the championship was between Arts '77 and Arts '76 and the final outcome was 4-2 which means that Arts '76 won the best of three games and therefore won the playoffs.

Broomball: Tuesday March 4 saw Arts '77 defeat Comm. '77 1-0. However Comm. '77 came back Wed. afternoon to blank the Arts team 2-0. The third game is Thursday, March 6. Results next edition. Waterpolo: PHE was again able to retain its Waterpolo Championship by defeating a strong, determined Arts '78 team. PHE victories came on the strength of 4-3 scores.

Ball Hockey: Civil-Math outscored Comm. '77 4-2; PHE beat Arts '75 3-2.

Arts '77 defending champions squeezed by Arts '78 5-3 and Arts '76 got by Comm. '76 4-3. Semi-final play will see Civil matched against Arts '76 and PHE against Arts '77.

Basketball: MEds were able to dominate Chem Grads and outscore them 31-12 PHE doubled up on Comm. '78 43-24.

Swimming: The preliminary heats in all events were held Tuesday March 4. The meet this year was an open meet which actually did result in fewer defaults. The diving was also held Tuesday night in which PHE won the top 4 spots. The finals were scheduled for Thursday March 6. Results will be reported in the next Journal.

An MBA degree from McMaster could help you to achieve your career objectives in the areas of management, administration, and education because the McMaster MBA program offers a wide range of optional courses (that can be selected to your needs) as well as providing a core of basic knowledge and skills. Although admission is restricted to those who have proven that they have the potential and commitment required to complete a demanding program, graduates in any discipline may be accepted.

Academic standing is not the only entry criterion but, as a general rule, you can have a reasonable expectation of completing the McMaster MBA program if you have maintained at least a second-class standing in the last two years of your undergraduate program and if you can achieve a satisfactory test score in the Admission Test for Graduate Study in Business.

Applicants for the McMaster MBA who have taken relevant course work may be granted advanced standing in our program. If you are interested in exploring this challenging opportunity further, fill in and mail this form.

30 millionth anniversary

KINGSTON (QUP) — The Geology Department, which only recently revealed that this week marks the 30,000,000th anniversary of the sedimenting of the sediment, announced today that this sedimentary layer is slowly sinking at an uncontrollable rate into a marsh. It appears that slightly over 30,000,000 years ago, before the sedimenting, that this region was covered by a large, gooey marsh.

It is expected that the sinking will mean that Survey School students will not be able to copy the previous years' assignments as the elevations will have changed to a horrifying and marked degree.

Officials of the Kingston Civil Emergency Unit said that there was no immediate cause for alarm, but that we should all carry rubber boots with us in case we do sink into Lake Ontario.

V-ball Triumphs at last OVVA champions

by Eleanor Barker

Sunday, March 2nd, the Queen's Senior Women's Volleyball team travelled to Ottawa University to compete in the Ottawa Valley Volleyball Association Championships. Although Queen's had been rated number one in the OVVA all year, recent difficulties in University competition had substantially reduced the Tricolor's confidence.

In the round robin play, which spanned a total of eight hours, Queen's faced the Phoenix, the Jets, the Nationals and the University of Ottawa. As a result of consistent team play throughout the Gals emerged in the first place playoff spot, sporting a points for versus points against average for the day that was almost 50 per cent higher than that of the next team. The second place team was the University of Ottawa, who have been of perennial trouble for Queen's in OWVAA competition. In fact, the Gals had not taken a match from the Gee Gee's since early November.

The final between the two rivals proved to be a highly exciting match of skill and endurance. Initially, the first game was fairly typical of previous encounters. That is, Ottawa was not giving anything away and was forcing Queen's to put their best attack plays and blocks to gain points. Finally, however, at the 12-12 mark, Queen's took control. The score was 14-13 for the Gals and the Ottawa coach called the usual game point time out as a last attempt to rally his team. Queen's took the next point, though, and left the court satisfied with their 15-13 victory. It seemed to the referee and scorer, however, that the game was not over. To the horror and surprise of spectators and players alike, one of the last vital points had not been recorded. "To make a long story short", Ottawa took the game 16-14.

A very determined Queen's line took the floor for the next game, becoming increasingly stubborn as Ottawa's fatigue became more evident. The Gals won the second game 15-12 and finally clinched the match with a decisive 15-7 victory. As OVVA Champions, Queen's moves on to the Zonal tournament, from which the best team will represent Ontario at the National Championships.

Barb Morrison (No. 14) and Anita Stankus (No. 8) display the expertise which helped lead Queen's to capture of the OVVA championships.

Ontario Women win Can. Nationals in swimming

Seven women from Queen's swam as part of the Ontario contingent in the National speed swim and diving meet held in Thunder Bay. Two hundred swimmers and divers participated in the meet lasting Feb. 27th to March 1st. Kathy Lennard, Jane Noakes, Jane Kaake, Diane Semple, Cathy Brace, Ginny Seath, and Liz Saunders formed a strong Queen's team.

The 400 medley and 400 freestyle relays swim by Kaake, Brace, Semple, and Noakes, broke former Queen's records: all the team swimming individual bests.

Lennard swam a close race in the 200 fly, 100 fly and another good race in the 200 back. Noakes swam well, placing 9th in 200 free, 10th in 200 I.M. and 11th in 400 I.M., breaking team records in each event. A 'goodluck' sign spurred her on to better efforts. Semple broke a Queen's record in the 100 fly and did her own personal bests in the 200 free and 200 I.M. Kaake swam her best times of the year in 100 back, 200 back and 200 I.M. placing well in them. Brace, swimming in the Nationals for the 5th time did her best time for the 200 breast-stroke and also swam well in the 100 breast-stroke and 50 free. Ginny did an all time best in the 200 back and also performed well in the 200 I.M. and 100 back. Liz made a strong comeback despite a previous illness and placed well in the 100 and 200 breaststroke. Her 100 breast-stroke was her best time of the year.

The Golden Gals also tried the unique Lakehead sport of tubing which was a welcome change from poolside activities. Spare time was also filled with skiing, sightseeing, skating and cheering on the McMaster men's team.

The meet was a good conclusion to a successful year for the Golden Gals, thanks for being a terrific coach Sheila McKirdy. Good Luck to the Golden Gals '76!

Roy Kirkpatrick

Roy Kirkpatrick

Roy Kirkpatrick will always be remembered for his belief in the 'great unwashed'. At Queen's, he has continually worked for the good of individuals. Kirkpatrick is a tremendously motivated person, his work is characterized as a combination of good ideas and a great deal of personal effort.

His sincere humanist concerns and his awareness of the value and importance of the liberal arts education have directed Kirkpatrick's extra-curricular activities in university. Kirkpatrick has won the Tricolor Award for a wide range of contributions, the most important of which is his extensive involvement with Camp Outlook.

He has also made significant and innovative contributions to ASUS orientation. More recently, as a second year medical student, Kirkpatrick's work has been centred in the Aesculapian Society. The personal commitment and honest social concern indicated in Kirkpatrick's work merit his membership in the Tricolor Society.

Tricolor Award:

The Tricolor Award is the highest non-academic award that can be received by a student at Queen's. It is presented to those who have rendered valuable service in non-athletic, extra curricular activities. The following are the reasons given by the selection committee for this year's choices. The photographs are by E. Sparks.

Ken Wong

Ken Wong

Ken Wong, a fourth year Commerce student, has received the Tricolor Award for his valuable and unselfish rendering of a wide range of services to the Queen's Community at large. These services included involvement within his faculty, the A.M.S. government, and the provincial student body.

A sincere and hard-working "behind the scenes artist", Wong's most noteworthy contributions included his development of the A.M.S. budget in the "year of the crunch" (1973-74), his involvement with the High Schools Liaison Committee which included the organization of two successful conferences held at Queen's, the writing of two important reports on student loans and the financing of higher education, as well as work on the Commerce Society's constitution.

Wong's varied and consistent service have added much to the life of Queen's Community and have made him a worthy recipient of the award.

Sue Harper

Sue Harper

Sue Harper can best be described as a 'stimulant' in university affairs. She has been conscientious; a person 'who gets her homework done'. She has an acute perception of the university's role in society and her role in the Queen's community.

Her concern about Queen's has permeated all of the many activities she has undertaken. In her time here, Harper has been a member of DSC's and Arts and Science Faculty Board, Chairman of the Arts and Science Inter-Year committee, and (most recently) president of ASUS. Throughout all of these tasks as well as many others, Harper has done an excellent job, for which she has been presented a Tricolor Award.

Kevin van Koughnett

Controversial, tenacious in his views, and one time loyal opposition to the AMS student government, Van Koughnett has been interested and involved in student government and student affairs throughout his five years at Queen's.

A strong motivating force within his faculty, Van Koughnett was awarded the Tricolor in recognition of his outstanding contribution as editor in chief of Golden Words. In addition he has been noted for his role as co-initiator and chief organizer of Information Bank.

As editor of the Words Van Koughnett turned the paper from a faculty "rag" into a truly representative newspaper. The result of his efforts was to win campus wide support for the newspaper via a referendum.

Kevin Van Koughnett

Jim Henderson, President of Artsci '76 presents Principal Ronald Watts approximately $1000 on behalf of Artsci '76. The graduation gift is to go towards Queen's "Rainbow Projects".

"Baptism of fire" for new speaker

"Baptism of fire" was what new AMS Speaker Dave Carter labelled his first Outer Council meeting held Thursday night. Also a first for newly elected Outer Council members the meeting was sparked with two hours of secret session debate arising over the motion to ratify new Journal editors for 1975-76.

When the motion to ratify Dan McClelland and Sarah Yarnell as Co-Editors-in-Chief was proposed by AMS Vice-President (Operations) Ian Nordheimer, former Internal Affairs Commissioner Lyn Whitham protested that she felt there had been a "conflict of interest" on the part of one particular member of the selection committee because that person lived with one of the editorial candidates up for ratification.

Many people, including the new AMS Executive took this as a slam on the integrity of Ian Nordheimer who lives with five people including Dan McClelland at 160 Johnson Street.

The Publications Selection Committee, which chooses the Journal Editor, Tricolor Editor and Journal Business Manager was this year made up of the following positions: Journal Editor (Suzanne Sherkin), Tricolor Editor (John Bottomley), Journal rep (Doug Bonnel), Tricolor rep (John Cameron), Incoming Vice-Pres. Operations (Ian Nordheimer), Out-going Vice-Pres. Operations (Peter Druxerman), Incoming Services Commissioner (Peter Meech) and Out-going Services Commissioner (John Beech).

After Nordheimer protested against Whitham's allegations Council moved into a two hour secret session.

When the doors to the meeting chamber were opened Mary Bloos had a motion on the floor which proposed that the selection committee reconsider its decision. Bloos, who shares an apartment with one member of the team who ran against McClelland and Yarnell for the editorship of the Journal, said he felt that the selection process had been unfair due to the possible conflict of interest. This motion was defeated by Outer Council.

In a subsequent motion put forward by AMS Pres. John Gray Council reaffirmed its belief in the integrity of the selection committee. In putting forward this motion Gray asserted that he felt Outer Council members did not support the allegations of conflict of interest.

Council then proceeded to ratify McClelland and Yarnell as Journal editors for 1975-76. Council then proceeded to ratify McClelland and Yarnell as Journal editors for 1975-76.

At the end of the meeting (sometime between one and two a.m.) Council decided in favor of a vote of confidence for new Speaker Dave Carter's handling of his first Outer Council meeting. Carter, currently enrolled in Law at Queen's, served last year as a Parliamentary Intern on Parliament Hill.

Brock "action" conference, focus on financial plight

by Peter Lane

This past weekend, Brock University in St. Catharines hosted the Ontario Student's Action Conference (OSAC) to facilitate discussion of common problems and development of a strategy for action, primarily concentrating on the financial plight of the universities in general and students in particular.

Friday night the conference began with registration and keynote addresses from students and labour leaders. On Saturday morning the real work began with a panel discussion on the matter of financial constraints, and speakers included the Mayor of St. Catharines, the President of Brock, an OFS worker, a Brock student (and President of NUS) and two labour leaders. This panel discussion was followed by reports from delegates from each university. Saturday afternoon we split up into a series of workshops on topics such as Student Aid, alternative methods of university funding, Labour and Education, and the Impact of Cutbacks. These workshops reported back to a general plenary session later in the afternoon, and their resolutions were debated in principle. On Sunday, another series of workshops were held to develop strategy at three levels: within each institution, within the community, and across the province and a general plenary session was held in the afternoon.

One of the real problems with the conference, besides the weather, which prevented many students from coming, was that it was a general conference for any Ontario student to attend. As such there were large delegations from Southern Ontario universities, and few from farther afield. Also, the participants were there as individuals rather than as representatives of their student bodies so that a great deal of non-productive factionalism resulted. However the Brock students deserve a great deal of credit for conceiving, organizing and operating the conference - it involved the time and energy of literally hundreds of Brock students, and thousands of dollars from the Brock University Students Union.

The reports on Saturday morning illustrated that all of the other Ontario post-secondary institutions are in much the same plight that we are; most are running a substantial deficit, suffering library cutbacks, losing bright young non-tenured faculty, having insufficient funds to repair and replace equipment etc.

From the workshops on Saturday afternoon, it was apparent that most participants had little use for James Auld's position that the 7.8 percent increase in the BIU would cover inflationary pressure. Furthermore the OFS position on the abolition of tuition fees, lowering the OSAP loan ceiling to $600 and increasing the weekly living allowance were reaffirmed, and the recommendation that universities should be funded according to individual needs rather than simply on the basis of enrolment was approved in principle.

Many other issues were discussed, and several empty resolutions were approved 'till the immediate enforcement of a progressive tax structure, per Carter Commission, in order to fund universities' but the most important outcome of the conference was the general feeling that students all across Ontario face similar problems. In addition to working on the problems at the level of our own institutions, students across Ontario have enough in common to organize and present a strong position to the provincial government. As a result, one of the important decisions this year will be the choice of an OFS Chief Delegate who will strongly represent Queen's students' concerns and can actively participate in OFS policy decisions. I would urge any interested students who feel they have the time, energy and ability to submit their application to the secretary in the AMS Office before 5:00 pm Friday March 14. We can have a strong effective voice at the provincial level, but we must have the right person to do it.

New Journal editors selected

by Nancy Flood

"Change" in various directions is the word being passed around the offices of the Student Union basement these days. Next year's Journal-Tricolor V.I.P.'s have just been named by the Publications Selection Committee of the A.M.S.

Replacing this year's editor in Chief Suzanne Sherkin, are Co-Editors Dan McClelland and Sarah Yarnell, both old Journal hands presently serving as Managing Editor and News Editor respectively. Jane Gutteridge takes over as Business Manager of the Journal and Mike Kingsbury as the Editor of Tricolor.

Speaking in terms of their plans for the future, Yarnell and McClelland emphasize the necessity of broadening the scope of the paper: "We will enforce an interpretative, perspective-orientated approach, which will provide readers with insight into how individual events are inter-related, and most vital: insight into how the chain of events affects their lives."

The Journal they say, "must investigate and take a stand on academic issues such as tenure, course evaluation, areas where financial cutbacks are made, and professor teaching ability". As well, new emphasis will be placed on the subject of Queen's University within the Kingston community.

This broadening of scope will be achieved by soliciting ideas from students at large and from a re-instituted and functional Editorial Board, Professors and students with background and experience in the particular topics will be enlisted for contributions to articles, as well.

Changes in design and layout, accompany elimination of "Back Page" and the institution of a "Freestyle" section for short stories, poetry and drawing.

How many pop cans have you thrown out?

by N. Flood

How many soft drink cans have you thrown out this week? Pollution Probe tells us that if the non returnable containers of the soft drink industry alone were banned in favour of the old refillable bottles, the reduction in garbage volume would be enough to save us $1,750,000 every year.

Since returnables are much more energy efficient, 23 percent less energy would be used in providing us with soft-drinks: a saving enough to heat 5,800 average sized homes in Ontario each year. Soft drinks in one-way bottles and cans cost the consumer more than in returnable bottles since the container cost can not be written off over a number of uses. If returnable bottles were used, the Ontario consumer would save $5,960,000 per year.

All this information was part of a display inside the "Action Against Non-Returnables" caravan which was on campus Thursday during one of its several stops in Kingston.

The caravan is a mobile display moving across the province gathering support for a ban on non-returnable, non-refillable soft drink containers in Ontario. It is a project of Pollution Probe.

Today the evidence of their efforts is everywhere; you can't even find refills in many stores.

Pollution Probe stresses non-returnables are a waste and that the government is not moving fast to doing anything about them. Early in 1973 James Auld, then Minister of Environment admitted that throwaway containers were unnecessary and harmful and announced the formation of the "Solid Waste Task Force", which for two years studied, among other things, the problem of beverage packaging.

Today their 3 volume 1,257 page report has been made public and its recommendations for the removal of non-returnable soft

Ottawa and other members of the garbage coalition.

Up until 1960 Probe says, we were doing very well without non-refillable bottles and cans, drinking all our soft drinks out of returnable glass bottles and returning the empties, each bottle being used about 20 times.

Drink container manufacturers soon realised however that bigger profits could be had if more containers could be produced. If each container were made to be used only once, 20 times as many would have to be manufactured. Today the evidence of their efforts is everywhere; you can't even find refills in many stores.

Today their 3 volume 1,257 page report has been made public and its recommendations for the removal of non-returnable soft containers are often quoted. Yet still nothing has been done. In December, Environment Minister William Newman announced that non-returnables would be neither taxed nor banned. He has in fact, adopted policies which, claims Probe will lead to the death of the returnable bottle.

The caravan depicted all this information graphically and in pamphlets. A large, returnable pop bottle in a coffin dramatized what they feel will be the fate of such refillable containers if the Ontario government has its way.

On the way out, those interested could donate a nickel and sign a novel-sized petition to be sent to William Davis. Probe is conducting such a write-in campaign everywhere in the province urging everyone to send in a nickel to symbolize their concern for Ontario's environment and to urge Davis to overrule Newman and announce a ban on nonreturnable soft drink containers.

In Ontario in 1972, over 60,000 tons of non-returnable resources were thrown away as non-returnable pop containers, most of which were used once for about 10 minutes. Probe says, "That just does not make sense in a finite world!"

Science '77's highly-publicized beer rally to Watertown on the March 1st weekend during which five Queen's students were arrested, has come under heavy fire.

A newly-elected AMS President, John Gray feels that "with all the positive things we do here at Queen's it takes one irresponsible event like this to cast aspersions on the character of all Queen's students". Gray denied that his criticism arose under pressure from the Principal's office and went on to quip, "you're close... but no cigar."

At last Thursday's AMS meeting both Gray and ASUS-rep. Kathy Wood demanded explanations for the event from Eng. Soc. President Bruce Blair. Blair, however, denied responsibility arguing that "the engineering society did not officially recognize the event. It never gave its approval, and, as it was an off-campus event, the society had no control over the actions of individual participants". In the same breath Blair apologized for any bad publicity the event may have caused.

The rally involved four-man teams allocated to various Watertown bars. Each team was required to down four beers per bar, with extra points for greater consumption.

"The problem arose," continued Horricks, "with the bonus points bit". The bonus points bit was a part of the programme that boosted a team's score through the fulfillment of certain tasks. These included the location and recovery of U.S. souvenirs and throwing-up at the Canadian-American border. The latter task was worth a big 1500 points and, according to Horricks, resulted in forty frosh jumping from the bus at the Ivy Lea crossing and shoving fingers down

Gray lines

After offering a challenge to all interested Queen's students this past week I am pleased to announce that the response was positive. The intention of this letter was simply to explain and communicate the ideas of our platform to concerned persons. The objective of the letter, however, was to introduce new names and ideas into what has been regarded in past years as an AMS closed shop.

I believe that our executive acclamation this year has actually stimulated a more positive response from this sleepy campus. We had as an example fourteen people apply for five commissioners positions compared to only eight people last year. But can this be used as an indication?

I don't believe the AMS smug political image to be an accurate one, however, and therefore set out to encourage younger students to take a more active role in AMS affairs. I feel strangely though that in many cases the emphasis which is placed on experience and past practical knowledge has a great deal of merit. Let's presently study the facts before us? The Alma Mater Society at Queen's is no longer a boys club or a place to merely climb the ropes. The business side of the AMS is a complicated and structured operation that is respected as one of the strongest student governments in Canada. We have gained credibility and respect by the very nature and degree of services that are carried out by believe it or not, full time students just like you! While other universities have expanded to professionals full time pub managers, promotional bookings agents etc., Queen's in its conservative while traditional role has stuck with hardworking and loyal students. Prior to bringing out the violins though I'd like to say that you're in good hands with these dedicated people who believe it or not protect your interests and monies with a great deal of pride and interest in their jobs. So during the upcoming year I ask for your support and criticism to help us make the decisions necessary in offering you strong leadership and a representative voice. Thanks!

John Gray

Campus Activities Commission

Bookings for major fall events should be in by March 28.

After this date the chances of getting the larger halls and auditoriums become small. The Commission has the right to refuse the booking of an event if it conflicts with another event previously booked to the extent that one or both might suffer financial losses. Every effort will be made to find other dates suitable to the groups involved. Movies:

Any student groups interested in running regular weekly campus movies or special movie series must apply to this commission.

Debating Tournament

The Queen's Debating Union will be holding an inter-mural debating tournament on Saturday, March 22. The tournament is open to all undergraduates. For more information and/or help in finding a partner, please contact one of:

SCOSA- a little committee for many student interests

Submitted by Bill Fallis
SCOSA Chairman

The Senate, back in '68, decided to establish the Senate Committee on Student Affairs whose terms of reference were to recommend to the Senate policies on matters affecting the interests and well-being of students, including athletics and recreation, health and counselling, residences, and the Students Memorial Union, and to advise the Senate on matters pertaining to the discipline of students.

Since that time, S.C.O.S.A. has been involved in a number of fundamental issues on campus. A discipline crisis in the late sixties, the athletic structure reorganization of 1970, and a complete appraisal of all existing Student Services and Student Affairs in 1973-74, are part of SCOSA's past concerns.

Among the recommendations arising out of the re-appraisal of 1973-74, was a recommendation, subsequently accepted by the Principal, that the position of Dean of Student Affairs be abolished. The Committee reached the conclusion that it was no longer necessary for an interface to represent student opinion, because students had gained representation on university government bodies and could inform the university of the students' conditions first hand. Even with this increased representation, SCOSA has continued to play a vital role in representing student concerns.

This year there was no committee looking into the short-term housing situation in the fall. SCOSA took the initiative to review the matter and recommended to Senate the creation of a Students' Advanced Housing List that has helped some 150 students find accommodation next year. SCOSA brought to the Senate the matter of inadequate lighting on campus that led to prompt action. Presently it is reviewing a recent athletic report and future housing concerns.

SCOSA is a unique committee in that it can consider a wide range of student interests, evaluate them, and make appropriate recommendation to Senate. Sometimes the matters are under partial responsibility of another Senate Committee while others are not. In either case, if SCOSA feels that a student concern was not justly dealt with, or that new information changes the situation, or that if a report requires student affairs evaluation, the appropriate communications and Senate advising would result.

SCOSA fills a void of student interest awareness that has played a substantial role in the past. With involved members and open communications, it will play a vital role in the future.

If you are interested in SCOSA fill in a Senate Committee membership form in the Senate Office today.

Nutrition Series

Food budgeting

by Dilys Bowman

Food budgeting - a subject almost every Queen's student will have to tackle sooner or later - was the topic of lecture in the nutrition series held Feb. 27.

Elizabeth Randall, who holds a Master's Degree in public health nutrition was the speaker. She emphasized the importance of establishing one's own priorities (cost? convenience? taste? health? tradition?) and determining a weekly budget. She also stressed that one decides what factors one is in a position to change (as the time spent on food preparation, the amount of cash spent, and one's perhaps rudimentary cooking skills), knowing which will be one's staple foods (eggs, milk, bread? Catelli dinner? Yogurt and whole grains? steaks and ice cream?) and what their cost is.

For those of us who want to eat cheaply, the message is: buy prepared over-packaged foods only if necessary; plan around weekly store specials, and shop alone and with a list; increase your culinary skills; and develop flexible food habits.

The cheapest dairy food is dried skim milk powder; the cheapest protein foods are fish, whole poultry, legumes, nuts and the braising cuts of meat. Root vegetables are inexpensive, and growing and preserving your own is a help; and the longer cooking-and-preparation time of certain grain products makes them the best buy.

One last note: for a woman with a healthy appetite, $10 a week is very ample. Are you eating as well as you could?

Languages present night of careers, course counselling

This year the German, Italian and Spanish and Russian DSC's have decided to hold a Course Counselling and Careers night in place of the usual practice of writing up evaluations on respective courses, during class time. Though originally intended for students in these particular language departments, Course Counselling and Careers night is also intended for any students in other faculties who are at all interested in the field of modern languages.

Professors and graduate students will be on hand from the departments to discuss courses with students. Speakers have been invited to talk to students with language and literature backgrounds, concerning career possibilities. Among those present will be Mr. Tony Massey from the McArthur College of Education, Ms. L. Kennedy from Career Planning and Placement and Mrs. K. Manley from Creative Languages Communication, a recently established organization which offers translating and interpreting services.

It is hoped that this informal get-together will provide an opportunity for all students to air their views and queries; be they interested in taking language courses, or already enrolled in a language oriented program at Queen's.

Course Counselling and Careers night will take place on Wednesday, March 12th in Kingston Hall. The first hour, starting at 7:30 p.m., will be devoted to Careers and those interested are invited to come to Room 201, Kingston Hall. From 8:30 on, professors will be available for consultation in classrooms located on the first floor of Kingston Hall. All are welcome.

Opinion

Student Government

by Allan Austin

Things have come to a pretty pass at Queen's. Our elected officials are no longer free to voice their opinions on a given topic, without the fear that some other campus politician will call down the wrath of God upon them for making "unrepresentative and irresponsible" remarks. Before we start deciding issues which will affect our lives at university we should give thought to the sorts of issues to be decided, and the manner in which these issues are to be decided by our representatives.

The first issue, the sort of questions to be decided, is not at the moment controversial. The formal relationship between the Senate and the student government of the AMS is not really ambiguous. The manner in which issues within the preview of the student government are to be decided is at the root of the general dissatisfaction with the system.

There are basically two non-complimentary views of the role played by elected representatives. The first says that an elected official shall act in accordance with the wishes of the majority of his constituents. The major advantage of this viewpoint is that the individual has a direct role to play in the formation of policy which will affect his own life. The major disadvantage of this outlook is that it reduces the elected official to not really anything more than a taker of political public opinion polls. From time to time, this view may actually force the elected official to act contrary to his conscience as to the "best interests" of his constituents. The second view holds, that elected representatives are to act in the best interests of their constituents, according to the representative's own evaluation of an issue, on the strength of the mandate of election. The disadvantage of this system is that the individual's viewpoint is apparently lost. The big advantage is that no elected representative need ever act against the dictates of his own conscience nor be unduly swayed by weight of public opinion in arriving at his own conclusions.

I am not suggesting for one instant that a representative should ever act without knowing how his constituents feel about an issue. But the first approach to the role of a representative implies only the tallying public opinion. The second approach implies that it is incumbent upon the representative to uncover the reasons behind those opinions: quality versus quantity. Also, it should be noted that it is a provision of any workable political system, that any elected representative can be removed from office by due process for failing to live up to his obligations or for misusing his privileges.

Clearly, the second view in which no representative is ever forced to act against his conscience is to be preferred to the alternative. Yet just before Reading Week the university population was asked to participate in the determination of several questions by referendum, clearly a variation of the first view of the role of elected representatives.

Why must we perennially revert to a system which will give us what we want, at the same time volubly declaring our support of a system in which our representatives are charged with providing us with what we need? What we want and what we need are patently not the same thing at all. To elaborate the bind that this places the elected representatives in, we might put it this way: "Why would anyone want to be responsible for driving a car load of people, when part of the deal is that the maniac in the passenger's seat is periodically allowed to seize the steering wheel?"

The alternatives for the future of student government at Queen's are two. We can dispense with most of the formal structure of the AMS if we decide that government by referendum is the way we want to proceed. All we will need then is someone to ask the questions of the student body and a SuperAdministrator to put those results into effect. We should be prepared to accommodate five or six of these people a year though, the frustration of not having any formal direction will cause them to burn out pretty quickly.

On the other hand, we can decide that there are certain universal objectives of university life worth going after. In such a case, we should elect the people we think most capable of meeting those objectives, but we must trust their decisions along the way. This is the way that the country as a whole functions.

A vote for a candidate for election to public office is a statement of trust. It says that the candidate has the trust of the voter to act on his behalf. Election of a candidate is essentially a moral charge to take the best interests of his constituents to heart, and to inform himself of all the issues that are relevant, and to act accordingly, subject always to his own conscience. This is the way the government of Canada works and it should be the way student government at Queen's works.

The duties entailed by holding public office at Queen's are not as soul-shattering as those of being a member of parliament. Queen's students are seldom called upon to decide questions of morality. Accordingly, the competence of performance we should expect should not be as high as that of a member of parliament; after all Queen's is to provide a learning experience for its students. But to deny the same level of trust we accord a member of parliament is to undercut his ability, which is after all, the reason he was elected. It further places him in the bind I suggested earlier.

I am suggesting that we take a more mature attitude to student politics at Queen's. That we give our full trust, that we expect the same dedication to duty, but that we view our representatives' shortcomings with a little more understanding.

Henninger.

You'll get used to it.

The first sip of Henninger tells you you're drinking a different tasting beer. A German beer brewed here in Canada. Not just a Canadian beer with a German name, but a real German beer.

Henninger is brewed from an authentic German recipe. With imported malt and yeast flown in from the Henninger brewery in Frankfurt. It's doubly fermented and naturally carbonated.

So be prepared for different taste. Once you've got used to it you'll never go back to what you're drinking now.

Henninger. It costs very little more than regular Canadian beer. And it's at your Brewers' Retail outlet.

letters to the editor

Impartial selection for Journal editor

Dear Editor: It seems that Outer Council, in the person of Paul Bennett, is seeking to take over control of the Committee to select the Journal Tricolor editors, thereby insuring control of the paper to A.M.S. interests. By A.M.S. I mean the student government, not the student body at large, whose interests the Journal most certainly should serve.

Council appears to fear that we might not always represent them as they desire. This came out most definitely at the Selection Committee this year. At a time when the newly elected Editors of the paper have pledged closer cooperation with Council, this attempted control leaves a foul odour indeed.

I cannot work on a newspaper that is controlled by any outside group. The purpose of a newspaper is to tell the truth, and it cannot do that if it is bound in any way.

I therefore want to make a public resignation from my position on the Journal until such measures may be taken as to insure a free Journal, through an impartial selection of Editor. Neither the A.M.S. Outer Council nor the Journal-Tricolor staff should vote, or if they do, neither should have a majority. Impartial and knowledgeable people are available: we should use them.

Sincerely,

John L. Bottomley

More on the pub

Dear Editor:

May I preface my remarks by saying that your efforts concerning the student pub controversy were most unfortunate and were richly deserving of the condemnations expressed by Miss Fawcett and Messrs. Sterling and Nordheimer. I regret that you did not see fit to give your apology the same prominence in the paper that the cause of it was given.

I am primarily troubled however by more fundamental questions which I feel deserve answering. For starters just who in the heck is Joyce Roe and who gave her the authority to dismiss properly appointed student officials. For all the life of me I cannot recall Mrs. Roe's name on a ballot student election ballot sheet. If, as I suspect, Mrs. Roe has no mandate from the student population then at what point and how did Mrs. Roe usurp the powers which properly belongs to the duly elected student officers on this campus or have our elected abdicated their proper function to Mrs. Roe. Surely a decision of this gravity is not one which ought to be left to a bureaucrat. At least when Nixon fired Cox and Richardson the American people could say to their chagrin that they were the author of their own misfortune. The students of Queen's and more particularly Miss Simpson and Mr. Sterling have no such consolation.

Perhaps the actions taken last Tuesday were not a unilateral exercise by Mrs. Roe perhaps she acted on the advice of the elected officers of the AMS but if that was the case, and frankly I don't doubt that it was, then why hasn't the appropriate officer stepped forward and accept responsibility. In either case, fundamental questions of political and administrative responsibility and accountability are involved.

In closing may I briefly raise some equally distressing questions like: was Miss Simpson informed of the charges against her and was she given the opportunity to answer them? If she was, then who was the judge of the explanation - Mrs. Roe? There is something rotten in the state, but by directing its attention to the alleged wrongs of Miss Simpson the Journal has missed the point of this controversy.

Felt out of place at open AMS house

Dear Editor:

Recently I have read a lot of articles concerning student apathy about student activities and especially the student government. In almost all of these articles, students were either being berated for their lack of concern or were being virtually begged to become involved. On Friday, March 7, the AMS held an open house with the intent of showing interested students "who was running the show". I was one of those interested students who attended that function. It was a waste of time. I actually felt out of place. Surely, the whole purpose of holding the open house was to get students like myself interested. If I am right in calling this the purpose, then I believe I can legitimately say that the open house failed miserably.

Recently, I have been as apathetic as anyone in my two years here. Now, at least, I know part of the problem: the AMS themselves. Perhaps Peter Druxerman was not far off the solution to this problem when he suggested, in jest it seems, that the AMS be completely restructured. I hope that John Gray and his associates will make the AMS more approachable by the average student next year than it is now.

Sincerely yours

Chris Nind

A guy I know just did himself in - blasted his brains out. I guess he just couldn't stand the way we weren't with him.

"There are many ways of living in a world without You".

"The innateness of the longing for relation is apparent even in the earliest and dimmest stage. Before any particulars can be perceived, dull glances push into the unclear space toward the indefinite; and at times when there is obviously no desire for nourishment, soft projections of the hands reach, aimlessly to all appearances, into the empty air toward the indefinite."

"The actual & fulfilled present exists only insofar as presentness, encounter, & relation exist. Only as the You becomes present does presence come into being."

When animals die, is it their tribe which deserts them, or do they wander off alone; to fulfill their peace with the world, and die in nature? Is the natural death, a struggle with life?

"The free human being encounters fate as the counter-image of his freedom. It is not his limit but his completion; freedom and fate embrace each other to form meaning, and given meaning, fate - with its eyes, hitherto severe, suddenly full of light - looks like grace itself."

"The eyes of an animal have the capacity of a great language. Independent, without any need of the assistance of sounds and gestures, most eloquent when they rest entirely in their glance, they express the mystery in its natural captivity, that is, in the anxiety of becoming."

"How powerful is the continuum of the It world -, and how tender is the manifestation of the You."

"How we are educated by children, by animals! Inscrutably involved, we live in the currents of universal reciprocity."

When I reach one hundred and am a feeble old man,
When my debts are all straightened and my life close at hand,
When I see my fellow beings continue themselves,
Will I want to continue, to hang on to that thread?
Will I have the courage to put my life to an end?
Will I have the courage to let God's will be done?

"The unlimited sway of causality in the It world, is not felt to be oppressive by the man who is not confined to the It world, but free to step out of it again and again into the world of relation. Here man finds guaranteed the freedom of his being and of being. Only those who know relation and who know of the presence of the You, have the capacity for decision. Whoever makes a decision is free, because he has stepped before the countenance."

"Free is the man that wills without caprice. He believes in destiny and also that it needs him. It does not lead him, it waits for him. He must proceed toward it without knowing where it waits for him. He no longer interferes nor does he merely allow things to happen. He listens to that which grows, to the way of Being in the world, not in order to be carried along by it but rather in order to actualize it in the manner in which it, needing him, wants to be actualized by him."

Between Nothingness and Eternity

Martin Buber

"Every actual relationship to another being in the world is exclusive. It's You is freed and steps forth to confront us in its uniqueness. It fills the firmament - not as if there were nothing else, but everything else lives in its light. As long as the presence of the relationship endures, this world-wideness cannot be changed."

"Nothing can doom man, but the belief in doom for this prevents the movement of return."

About twenty students at Queen's commit suicide every year. Heard from them lately?

"Often we think that there is nothing to be heard, as if we had not long ago plugged wax into our ears."

We cannot go to others with what we have received, saying: 'this is what needs to be known, this is what needs to be done'. We can only go and put to the proof in action. And even this is not what we 'ought' to do; rather we can - we cannot do otherwise. "Action is not null: it is intended, it belongs to the creation; but this action no longer imposes itself upon the world, it grows upon it as if it were non-action." "Man can do justice to the relation to God that has been given to him, only by actualizing God, in the world in accordance with his ability and the measure of each day, daily."

"The purpose of relation is the relation itself - touching the You. For as soon as we touch a you, we are touched by a breath of eternal life."

I am my brother's keeper - here? In Bangladesh?

"Actuality is to be found only in effective activity. The strongest and deepest actuality is to be found where everything enters into activity - the whole human being without reserve, and the all-embracing god; the unified I and the boundless You."

"If one starts out from the soul, the perfect relationship can only be seen as bipolar, as the fusion of opposite feelings."

"Every I - You relationship is a situation defined by the attempt of one partner to act on the other one so as to accomplish some goal; depends on a mutuality that is condemned never to become complete."

"In the pure relationship you feel altogether dependent, as you could never possibly feel in any other - and yet also altogether free as never and nowhere else; created - and creative. You no longer feel the one, limited by the other; you feel both without bounds, both at once."

"Creation - happens to us, burns into us, changes us, we tremble and swoon, we submit. Creation - we participate in it, we encounter the creator, offer ourselves to him, helpers and companions."

"But the God-side of the event whose world side is called return, is called redemption."

Hewlett-Packard introduces a smaller uncompromising calculator: the HP-21 Scientific.

Now $159.00* buys:

More power than our HP-35. 32 pre-programmed functions and operations vs. 22 for our HP-35. The HP-21 performs all log and trig functions, the latter in radians or degrees. It's our only calculator short of the HP-45 that lets you:

- convert polar to rectangular coordinates, and back again ( $\rightarrow P, \rightarrow R$ );
- do full register arithmetic ( $M+$ ,  $M-$ ,  $MX$ ,  $M\div$ );
- calculate a common antilog ( $10^x$ ) with a single keystroke.

The HP-21 also performs all basic data manipulations ( $1/x$ ,  $y^x$ ,  $\sqrt{x}$ ,  $^x\sqrt{y}$ ) and executes all pre-programmed functions in one second or less. In sum, it's designed to solve tomorrow's problems as well as today's.

Smaller size. 6 ounces vs. 9 ounces for our HP-35.

Full display formatting. The display key (DSP) lets you choose between fixed decimal and scientific notation and lets you control the number of places displayed. (The HP-21 always uses all 10 digits internally.)

If a number is too large or small for fixed decimal display, the HP-21 switches automatically to scientific. It never confuses a smaller number with zero.

Finally, if you give the HP-21 an impossible instruction, the Display spells E-r-r-o-r.

RPN logic system. Here's what this unique logic system means for you:

- You can evaluate any expression without copying parentheses, worrying about hierarchies or re-structuring beforehand.
- You can solve all problems your way—the way you now use when you use a slide rule.
- You solve all problems—no matter how complex—one step at a time. You never work with more than two numbers at once.
- You see all intermediate answers immediately.
- The HP-21 executes each function immediately after you press the function key.
- You can easily backtrack when you err. The HP-21 performs all operations sequentially.

• You can re-use numbers without re-entering them. The HP-21 becomes your scratch pad.

H-P quality craftsmanship. One reason Nobel Prize winners, astronauts, conquerors of Everest, America's Cup navigators and over 500,000 other professionals own H-P calculators.

Your bookstore will give you a demonstration today. Challenge our new HP-21 with your problems. See for yourself how much performance $159.00* can buy. If your bookstore doesn't have the HP-21 yet, call your local Hewlett-Packard sales office for the name of a dealer who does.

Landau's Galileo uneven

by Judith Thompson
Bertolt Brecht's Galileo was presented to Kingston on Thursday by the American Film Theatre. This lengthy film was directed by Joseph Losey and produced by Ely Landau.

The first half of the production was, if nothing else, intellectually satisfying. The distinctly epic tone of Losey's interpretation was pleasing. In order to achieve Brecht's desired "alienation effect", a number of devices were utilized: three choir boys appeared intermittently out of nowhere to sing us a few lines of narrative; places and dates as well as the direction of the action were printed on the screen at each turning point, ensuring the continued objectivity of the audience. Topol occasionally voiced his thoughts directly into the camera. To see Brecht, ideally, is to learn, and not to live vicariously as one does in naturalistic theatre. Perhaps in order to elucidate Brecht's already lucid symbols, those characters that represented factions, such as "the people" and "the clergy" were slightly overdone. Cerebral saturation, however, does not ensure good entertainment. The first half of Landau's Galileo was tedious enough to lull several members of the audience to sleep.

The second half, however, was both intellectually and emotionally engrossing. The Brechtian alienation devices were even more marked than in the first half; the sets were starker, the music, sung by characters in the film as well as by the choir boys, was severe. However, despite Losey's strict adherence to epic technique, the great human moments in Brecht's play, acted well by all, and especially brilliantly by Topol, shone victoriously through, carrying the audience away in a most un-Brechtian fashion.

Topol, as Galileo, captured the great strength and restlessness of the scientist with superb technique and great feeling; he was a truly sympathetic character. We reacted to him not as a symbol of truth and progress, but as an individual fighting the corruption of a decadent society. His student, played by Iain Travers as a boy and Tom Conti as the man, took hold of us with his fervent dedication to his master and to science.

The antagonists, including a cameo by John Gielgud as the old cardinal on the point of collapse, were all defined character types, played with great competence. The entire cast worked together to present an idea. The crowd, for example, demonstrated clearly Brecht's disdain for the vulgar and decadent.

However, Landau's

production of Galileo was not entirely effective, either as a piece of didactic theatre in the Brechtian tradition, or as theatrical entertainment. The powerful emotional nature of the second half, in which Galileo betrays science and himself to the church, and is later reunited with a student to whom he passes on his last work, runs contrary to Brecht's didactic intent. The boring nature of the first part disallows the labelling of the film as "entertainment". The problem lies largely with Brecht, whose intention was to teach, and not to engross. If the play had been presented as pure polemic, it would have been pleasing to a few. If, however, it had been played only for its emotional impact, it would have been untrue to Brecht.

Losey, as director, and Landau, as producer, reached a mid-point, and in the second half even combined the two ostensibly opposing concepts: this production, although interesting, and at times brilliant, was inconsistent, and therefore not entirely successful.

Science fact?

The Wind from Nowhere
J.I. Ballard
Penguin Books 1974 (reprint)
by Tony Davis

John Ballard, noted British science fiction author, has published another 200-odd page novel, with psychological notions again being an inherent part of the work.

A tremendous wind wracks the earth, gathering up gravel, turning the sky black with soil. The wind increases five miles per hour in velocity daily to a fitful peak of 550 miles per hour. Coastal cities are flooded, tall buildings blown down. There appears to be no escape.

Ballard, noted for his psychological womb imagery, portrays a mankind that burrows into the ground, seeking to escape the earthly peril. Man is being challenged, trying to survive but:

"they were the helpless victims of a deep-rooted optimism about their right to survival, their dominance of the natural order which would guarantee them against everything but their own folly, so that they had made gross assumptions about their own superiority."

Now they were paying the price for this, in truth reaping the whirlwind!"

Man the destroyer. Now nature is fighting back. Instead of man molding the environment, the environment is molding man.

Ballard emphasizes man's inbred instinct for survival, and the "law" of the strong now takes precedence: "I know it sounds despicable but adaptability is the only real biological qualification for survival."

One man, though, a wealthy financial giant, seeks with his earthly wealth to fight the wind, constructing a massive structure above ground, to defy the elements.

"I alone have built upward, have dared to challenge the wind, asserting Man's courage and determination to master nature... If I fail, Man has no right to assert his innate superiority over the unreason of the natural world."

And the proud always fall the hardest. Aside from his usual moralizing, Ballard has created in The Wind from Nowhere, a compelling drama, as man is brought down, and a number of individuals fight, in their own ways, to survive. Certainly a choice piece of science fiction, or might it be science fact?

We would like to express our appreciation to Smith-Hill Bookstore, 193 Princess Street, for supplying this book.

A play with conviction

by Donald Stephen

It can be relatively easy to review a poor production. One need only catalogue the obvious flaws, apportion them to paragraphs, and generously pepper with vitriol. But director Peter Duffy's Beggars Workshop Theatre production of Peter Madden's The Night No One Yelled does not lead itself to such treatment; Duffy and company have provided Kingston with one of the best pieces of theatre seen here in a very long time.

Madden's play presents an hour and twenty minutes in the lives of nine penitentiary prisoners. They are there when the members of the audience take their seats, and they are still there when the audience leaves. Significantly, there is no intermission.

In an inverted theatre-in-the-round, designer Valerie Tocco effectively sets the nine convicts in separate cells around the perimeter of Grant Hall. They dream, they despair, they quarrel, fret, taunt, commiserate -- and the audience is in the cell block.

Madden's statement is powerful. Concretely invoking a Hell akin to Sartre's No Exit, the prisoners are caught fast in the pressure-cooker of contradiction: enforced isolation and equally enforced togetherness, mutual torment and mutual interdependence. If there is a lack of action in the play, it is because there is so little scope for action in a prison. And if we, the audience, begin to chafe after sixty or seventy minutes, then...

The Night No One Yelled is not a simple story-telling; it is a demonstration.

Steering clear of both the romantic bravura of Jimmy Cagney busting out of Sing Sing and the maudlin sentimentality of Burt Lancaster cuning canaries in Alcatraz, the actors were chillingly human. Demonstrating a fine appreciation and modulated, disciplined technical control of pace and tone, cadence and dynamics, the eight prisoners with speaking parts were orchestrated into a nearly musical polyphony. And especially moving was Gil Viviani in the speechless role of the fragile Old Man. Confronted by the other cells, with his ragdoll and his blanket, he was a silently eloquent exemplar of pathos and prophesy.

Local masquers, here is a model to take note of. Local audiences have seen an excellent production; they cannot help but want to see more.

"Average" fits perfectly

Average White Band
Atlantic Records.

by Dave Card and Tim Runge
Average White Band is a new group of six white musicians—two guitarists, two saxophonists, a drummer and a bassist; who perform a type of music normally associated with black musicians, and it is from this fact that they presumably have derived their name. Unfortunately, however, "average" turns out to be a key adjective for this album, and in fact there are many black bands working in this same musical genre who have demonstrated a far greater competence than Average White Band.

"Pick up the Pieces", which has been a commercial success for the band, is probably the best cut on the album, and the only one which foregoes the mediocre vocals of Hamish Stuart and Alan Gorrie, to allow some freedom of expression for the horns which are otherwise put to precious little use.

On the other hand, Average White Band presents a consistently accurate and smooth sound that is never offensive to the ear. All of the compositions on the album, excepting one previously released by the Isley Brothers, originals, and feature a fairly basic instrumental format, they utilize the niceties of sound engineering to contrast two lead guitars and vocalists in a pleasant, if not funky, way.

The typical skill of the Average White Band is perhaps its weakest point, and is accentuated by the fact that no more than 10 seconds pass in any one song without the utterance of some trite little line. Many groups today hide a deficit in this department by concentrating on instrumental development and opting for a minimum of vocal expression, which is all the better, since not every song writer is a Leonard Cohen.

It is the opinion of these reviewers that the musical talent is present and that the group would accomplish much by exploiting their ability to create the smooth rock-jazz sound partially unleashed in "Pick up the Pieces". Perhaps the band would profit if they attempted their own style of musicianship rather than trying to mimic, unsuccessfully to say the least, the black musicians and groups heard from radio stations out of Windsor and Detroit. Their attempt is neither original nor impressive, nor have they the depth of sound or the true funky beat characteristic of the black-soul musicians.

Harmless album

Miles of Aisles Joni Mitchell

by Paul Luke

This should have been a much better album. As it stands it has pleasant moments but even these are qualified by the essential anemia of the record. It is Joni Mitchell's most accessible recording but it also her most dreary; it never overtly offends but there is a consumptive quality to the music which precludes the arousal of intense appreciation on the part of the listener. This record is sick, it's a case of terminal lethargy and exercising it on your turntable just ain't gonna make it get better.

As someone justly remarked of Ray Davies, Joni Mitchell is an artist with no masters and few peers. Miles of Aisles is a live, 2 record collection of her most attractive material and is remarkable for its amazingly crisp, clean sound. The L.A. Express, the band backing the artist up, is consistently smooth, polished, subdued and thoroughly unnatural. There is something provoking about their bloodless perfection, they are incapable of making a goof but they are equally incapable of infecting their employer's music with anything remotely resembling feeling or passion. Their performance of "Both Sides Now" is as insipid as sugarless candy while their withering napalm bombardment of "Woodstock" renders a former anthem a barren, sterile ditty. At George Harrison's Toronto concert reedman Tom Scott and guitarist Robben Ford demonstrated a certain capacity for exuberance and bite but here their contributions are hopelessly flat and spineless.

Not surprisingly the whole burden of revitalizing her songs is shifted on to Joni's shoulders. Happily there are a number of songs where she accompanies herself on piano, dulcimer or guitar with admirable grace and it is on these songs that her supple, high-pitched voice is heard to telling effect. She even makes awkward mistakes and it sounds quite wonderful.

Although it is in large part enervated pablum Miles of Aisles is a harmless record, probably even a cut or two above the live Dylan album. If antiseptic hack work on a major talent appeals to your streak of perversity, buy it, but if you really want to blow your mind my advice is to invest your bucks in an old Kinks album.

KARATE AT KWEEN'S

by Gary Vienneau and Ken Fuller

In the last few years there has been a great upsurge in the public awareness of the formerly mystical oriental martial arts. To those who watch T.V.'s Kung-fu, or follow the "Chinese westerns" and even the comic book scene, the Kung-fu King or karate expert has taken over from the other super heroes of our time. Unfortunately the media's approach has resulted in the average person obtaining a rather slanted view of what to many dedicated people has become an important and real aspect of their life. This article was written with the intention of clarifying some of the basic misconceptions concerning karate and presenting an up-to-date picture of the state of the art at Queen's to-day.

The karate method of un-armed combat derives from one of the oldest oriental fighting arts in existence. The first primitive form of karate to be developed originated in China about fourteen hundred years ago from the teachings of Bodhidharma, the founder of Zen Buddhism. Buddhist monks, whose religion prohibited the use of weapons, relied upon this primitive form of un-armed combat to defend themselves from armed aggressors. Under the tutelage of Bodhidharma, the monks of the Shaolin Temple, in Hunan Province, became renowned throughout China for their courage, fortitude and prowess in the martial arts.

As teaching of this original method spread and developed it came to bear the name of its origin and was called Shorin-ji kenpo. It was this method that eventually reached the Ryukyu Islands of Okinawa and developed into Okinawa-te, the forerunner of present day karate. Kenpo became further refined during the Japanese occupation of Okinawa in the fifteenth century when the Japanese overlords, the Satsuma clan, forbade the islanders use of all weapons. This action provided intense impetus to the expansion of the imported kenpo system and as well led to the development of alternative weapon systems of which the wooden nunchaku (chuka sticks) or famous whirling sticks of Bruce Lee have become most well known. Training in karate, however, was always conducted with the utmost secrecy in Okinawa with no one teaching or practicing openly as is done today.

With the beginning of the Meiji period (1868-1912) karate gradually became more public and was introduced into the physical education programs of Okinawan normal schools. This led, in 1902, to one of the founding fathers of modern day karate, Gochin Funakoshi, beginning a series of public demonstrations. In the early spring of 1922, upon the invitation of the Ministry of Education, Funakoshi-san travelled to Japan to give numerous demonstrations of the techniques of his art. The Japanese populace, with its vast history of budo and the ways of the samurai class, were greatly impressed with the effectiveness of these techniques and their popularity quickly spread. This wide acceptance in Japan soon gave rise to numerous schools and variations. Each new school and each new variation added to the art of karate and tended to improve it.

One of the more recent and most practical methods of karate practiced in Japan today is called Kenkokan Karate. This particular school was founded in 1946 by "Shiman" Kori Hisataka. During his early years Dr. Hisataka studied and became adept at both kenpo karate and Okinawa-te.

In the course of his studies he found certain weaknesses in the original forms which disturbed him and therefore attempted and ultimately succeeded in creating a stronger form. To augment the strength and effectiveness of his karate form, he made a careful and analytical study of all the Japanese martial arts. At the same time he also studied the natural and instinctive fighting methods of wild animals like the tiger, the bird and even the quick snapping attack of the snake. He eliminated what he considered useless and impractical in other karate techniques and finally emerged with a karate form which measured up to his own high standards.

Kenkokan Karate is presently practiced by members of the Queen's University Karate Club under the leadership of Sensei (Instructor) Peter Liapis and Sensei Gary Vienneau, both certified black belts in this style. They received their black belts from Sensei Shigaru Ishino, 4th degree black belt, who resides and instructs in Montreal. This All Japan Shorinjiryu Karate Champion (1967) and outstanding Karate Player of Japan (1968-69), is a graduate of Nihon University in Tokyo and has been instructing Kenkokan Karate in Canada since 1969. With clubs in Canada, the U.S. and Japan, Kenkokan Karate is becoming an internationally respected form of the martial arts.

Kenkokan Karate is a practical composite of striking, punching, kicking, throwing, holding and choking techniques. As an additional technique the style also includes training with a wooden bar and shields, in order to sharpen reflexes and increase the students speed. This fighting form has been taken from the art of Keno or samurai fencing and

and

is only for advanced students or those who have attained the degree of black belt.

Practical application of these karate techniques revolves around three areas of training exercises, which in turn are categories for tournament competition. These are Kumite, Kata and Shiai. Kumite is pre-arranged fighting form executed by two or more players. It is practiced to develop technique, endurance, karate form and a sense of judgement and timing. This type of competition is unique to Shorinjiryu Kenkokan Karate as most other styles only compete in Kata and Shiai.

Formal exercises, or Kata, are systematically organized series of offensive and defensive techniques performed in a set sequence. In addition to the perfection of form, such factors as vigour, power and attitude are also taken into consideration. Each formal exercise must be viewed as an organic unit and there must be a smooth flow from one technique to the next. As in a diving or gymnastic competition Kata as well as Kumite are judged by means of a point system.

Shiai, or free sparring, is the heart of karate as it is an actual fighting contest between two persons. Each must both attack and defend while attempting to get in a "killing" blow by means of an appropriately placed punch, strike or kick. If this "killing" blow is delivered to the mid-section, the blow must actually strike the specially designed fiberglass protection worn by fighters. If this blow is exact, powerful and well timed, it will be considered an "Ippon" and the match is over. If the "killing" blow is delivered to the face or neck, the blow must be stopped short of the target, but it must close enough so that if followed through it would actually strike the target. Such well executed techniques are awarded "wazari". Accidental or intentional contact can result in disqualification, if serious enough, otherwise it is scored as a minus point in the case where the winner is determined by points or "wazari".

Karate is practiced in bare feet in a training hall called a dojo. The karate costume, or gi, is comprised of a lightweight top and pants bound by a belt whose color denotes rank. There were two basic grading systems, one below black belt and one for black belt ranks. In Kenkokan Karate there are seven levels or "kyu" before the achievement of black belt. There are ten degrees or "dan" of black belt which may be attained, with the tenth indicating mastery of the system both physically and spiritually. Each level, above and below black belt rank, has certain requirements which must be met and these, along with tournament competition participation, determine advancement through the levels.

In teaching Kenkokan Karate the founder has also given consideration to the psychological aspects of the art. As the student builds a strong body, a body scientifically geared for self-defense, he finds himself gaining in confidence and self respect. He acquires the poise necessary for controlling himself in dangerous situations and does not fall prey to the fear or excitement which affect someone who has not been so rigorously trained. The student's general state of mind becomes placid and his tendencies toward fighting or brawling eventually disappear, except when he is called upon to defend himself. As a trained student he already knows his ability to fight well and no longer feels the immature need to prove himself. In Japan it is common knowledge that a good Karate player makes a good citizen.

Although karate is unquestionably the most violent of the martial arts, this by no means implies that karateka are brutes. Karate has a rather spectacular image of its proponents breaking boards and bricks with their bare hands. This, of course, is not an obligatory part of any training, it merely serves as a striking way to demonstrate the force of some karate blows and the skills of the karateka. What must be understood is that

and

technique is everything in sport karate and that karate trained people meet in matches with opponents of equal, or nearly equal skill under conditions which are controlled or regulated. They do not meet in street fights. The difference between karate training for self-defense and for sport is simple that to use karate for self-defense you need not be expert in the techniques. For self-defense purposes, a limited knowledge of a few blocking techniques and some knowledge of the nerve centers is enough protection for the streets.

The Queen's University Karate Club has not been idle in its two years of existence. In spite of financial setbacks, the club has travelled extensively within the international karate scene, in large part due to the initiative and dedication of club members. Tournaments have been attended in New York City, Baltimore (Maryland), Montreal, Hamilton, Peterborough and Sudbury. In individual competition club members have garnered more than their share of trophies. In team competition the Queen's club has proved a formidable opponent. In last year's Ontario University Tournament, an informal meet of some of the provinces universities, the Queen's team placed third. This year the O.U.A. sanctioned a meet at York University on March 1st. The Queen's Karate Club again fielded a strong unit, for this important event.

The club meets every Monday and Wednesday nights at 2130 hrs. and Saturday afternoon at 1330 hrs. in the combatives room of the Phys. Ed. Center. Anyone interested in watching a real karate workout or in joining this club is invited to drop in at the dojo at these times and view the club members in action.

Women-Silver, Men-Bronze

Queen's 2nd in Can-Am Fencing

by Brian Day
On February 28, seven members of the Queen's University Intercollegiate fencing team, flew to Winnipeg to take part in the Can-Am Fencing Competition. The team consisted of Debbie Christian, Rosemary Knight, Sue Seto, Bruce Peterkin, Tim Bowman, Peter Kingsman and Steve Bishop.

In the men's foil competition on the Saturday, Bruce Peterkin, Tim Bowman and Peter Kingsman battled their way to a very convincing bronze medal finish with Tim Bowman and Bruce Peterkin finishing third and ninth respectively in the men's foil individual competition. Tim Bowman was awarded the Can-Am bronze cup in men's individual foil.

Later that day, the sabre team consisting of Tim Bowman, Peter Kingsman, and Steve Bishop slashed their way to another bronze medal.

The women's foil competition was held on Sunday. Fencing for Queen's were Debbie Christian, Rosemary Knight, and Sue Seto.

The girls had only one defeat - to the University of Saskatchewan, the eventual winners in this event. This gave the Queen's women's team second place and silver medals. Sue Seto placed fourth individually and Rosemary Knight came in sixth place.

This Can-Am Competition consisted of teams from all over

Canada and the U.S.A. Queen's showed much consistency and strength in their fencing ability taking an overall second spot in the 1975 Can-Am Competition. The top five teams in order of finish were, University of Saskatchewan, Queen's University, University of Alberta, University of Minnesota and University of Winnipeg.

Track and Field

Women finish in fine form

Saturday, in the early hours of a cold, grey dawn, five intrepid adventurers marched quietly to gather at the Phys. Ed. Centre of a still-slumbering campus. The five were to carry the colours of the Women's Track Team into competition at the Ontario Junior Indoor Championships at the C.N.E. in Toronto.

The voyage to Toronto passed uneventfully as the girls gathered their strength for the test. Upon arrival, there was barely time to change before the first of the group was called into action. Betsy Carey ran in the first heat of the women's 50 metres. Battling a classy field, Carey placed third in her heat with a time of 6.9 seconds. Unfortunately, had she been entered in a slower heat she would certainly have advanced to the finals as there were a number of finalists with times of 6.9 and 7.0 seconds.

In the 400 metres Jan Pipe and Marj Bousfield both smashed the Queen's record. Bousfield placed second in her heat with a time of 62.2 seconds and Pipe placed first in her heat with the new Queen's record time of 62.0 seconds.

After a short interlude, Bousfield and Plummer entered the fray once more to represent Queen's in the 800 metres. Bousfield set another new Queen's record with a fine run of 2:25.1 and a third place finish in her heat. Plummer recorded a time of 2:39.0 in a good time-up for the 1500 metres.

At 4:20 p.m., Plummer and Brown were on the track for the 1500 metres. Plummer knocked more time off her race with a clocking of 5:22.0. Anne Brown also ran an excellent 1500 metres and she equalled her best time of 5:32.0 to place 9th. As if the 1500 were not enough, 20 minutes later Brown was at the starting line for the 3,000 metres. Brown ran a very "gutsy" race and ended with a strong finish to place sixth with a time of 12:49.6. The rest of the girls also wish to thank Anne for her timing efforts; even though she didn't get all of the relay lap times, it was a job well done.

The final event of interest was the 4x200 metre relay. Carey, Bousfield, Plummer and Pipe outran the East York Track Club in their heat with a time of 1:51.7. Carey dazzled the field with another of her fabulous starts and Pipe recorded an impressive anchor leg.

The season is over now and all members of the Women's Track Team wish to express their thanks to coach Sue Bolton for all her hard work and encouragement. Next Year, U. of T. and Western will be trampled!

The Badminton Explosion

The explosion of badminton in Toronto, as well as across Ontario, has been phenomenal the last few years. Similar games such as squash cannot match the quarter of a million people in Ontario who now participate in badminton. In the last national census, people were asked what sport they played and 900,000 Canadians answered "Badminton".

The competitive aspect also of badminton in Ontario is high.

There are over forty-five provincially sanctioned tournaments alone and Ontario sends many players across Canada and around the world to compete.

It is also a fact that few Canadian athletes are physically fit enough to play competitive badminton as it is a game that demands great physical stamina. Professional hockey players could not even beat an under sixteen junior badminton champion.

In the social medium, badminton has become a widely accepted game to all people throughout Ontario. There are approximately 15,000 active players across Ontario organized and affiliated within club structures in conjunction with the Ontario Badminton Association and another 235,000 who just enjoy the social aspect of badminton.

LOOKING FOR A CHANGE?

St. Lawrence College programs in Chemical Engineering Technology and Laboratory Science Technology combine solid theoretical background with extensive practical experience to prepare you for direct entry to challenging careers in:

1. Industry: research and development, processing, quality control, manufacturing, chemical and technical sales.
2. Government agencies: doing chemical, biochemical, biological, microbiological and medical research.
3. Education: preparing for teaching laboratories, demonstrating laboratory techniques, scientific research and continuing education.

Class size in both programs is small, facilitating a close working relationship between faculty and students.

St. Lawrence College graduates are presently employed as Chemical Analysts, Technical Representatives, Laboratory Technicians, et cetera with such companies as Inco, The Atomic Energy Commission, Alcan Research, Syncrude, and Dyco.

Placement has been virtually 100 percent in the past with starting salaries in the range of $8,000 - $10,000.

LENGTH OF PROGRAMS: 6 semesters (three years)

ADMISSION REQUIREMENTS: An Ontario Secondary School Graduation Diploma, its acceptable academic equivalent, or mature student status.

It is recommended that students have high school level five Mathematics, Chemistry and Physics. Advanced credits will be given to students with relevant university background.

FEE: $125 per semester

International Women's Year 1975

by Karen Carson PHE '74
Once upon a time a 'nice' girl was supposed to lose everything but her virginity. In the good old days, nobody loved a tomboy. A lady was expected to look pretty, to smile pretty and to lose pretty, nearly all the time.

We mean of course, we all agree to what Bobby Riggs has said - the female should be barefoot, pregnant and in the kitchen.

However, the status of women has been dramatically changing in the last half century.

Women have transcended the role of housewife and mother to attain top positions in politics, education, and business. Yet while competing for these jobs the woman is expected to look beautiful and feminine.

The definition of femininity alluded to by most writers appears to require the abandonment of, or at least the camouflage of, such basic human characteristics as strength, speed, endurance, and coordination. Of course, such qualities in women may be acceptable if they are strength for carrying out the washing, speed for keeping up with three children, moving in three directions, endurance for completing spring housecleaning in a day, or coordination for the tasks of changing a diaper, ironing, and preparing a dinner simultaneously.

Feminist authors have now begun to destroy many of the traditional beliefs concerning the role of women in society. Germaine Greer has written on the stereotype which results from the concept of femininity. She calls it the 'Eternal Feminine'.

Nothing must interfere with her function as a sex object. She may wear leather, as long as she cannot handle a motorbike. She may wear rubber, but it ought not to indicate that she is an expert diver or waterskiier. If she wears athletic clothes, the purpose is to underline her unathleticism. She may sit astride a horse, looking "Another American woman just now swam in from France. Her husband was carried from the boat suffering from cold and exposure. She has two children, the smallest a girl, who is swimming over tomorrow. Yours for revised edition of the dictionary explaining which is the weaker sex."

- Will Rogers, commenting on the Channel swims by women, 1926.

"Not to have confidence in one's body is to lose confidence in oneself...It is precisely the female athletes, who being positively interested in their own game, feel themselves least handicapped in comparison with the male. Let her swim, climb mountain peaks, pilot an airplane, battle against the elements, take risks, go out for adventure, and she will not feel before the world that timidity."

Simone de Beauvoir, 1949.

WHY NOT?

Women's Role in Sports

--outlined by Alberta
P.E. Student

LETHBRIDGE-- (CUP)-- "Sports may be good for people, but they are considered a lot better for males than for females."

Jane Schwindt, a third year physical education student at the University of Lethbridge, outlined women's role in sports from ancient Greece to the present day at a public forum in the Lethbridge Public Library.

Her talk on "Women in Sports" was part of a continuing series of lectures on "Women in Society" presented by the Women's Place in Lethbridge. Schwindt said women created their own program of sports, the Heraea Games in honor of Hera, wife of Zeus, because women were barred from participating in or even observing the Olympic Games.

But only in the last 50 years, with the emancipation of women from some home responsibilities, have women begun to take a prominent role in sports, she said.

Despite a woman's interest in sports, and "no matter what her age, race, education, talent, residence or riches, the female in sport is discriminated against. The funds, facilities, coaching, rewards, and honours allotted to women are grossly inferior to those granted to men, Schwindt said.

The process of discouragement begins when young girls are taught to be ladylike and play with dolls and continues in high school when "girls are expected to be cheerleaders-sitting back and idolizing the boys as they become more physically fit while they retain their feminine inactivity."

At the college and university level, women get poor practice hours, equipment and coaching, she said.

At the University of British Columbia $5 of the student fee is allotted to sports of which 80c goes to women's athletics and $4.20 to male athletics. At the University of Lethbridge, $10,000 was put into starting a men's hockey team but a new women's sport program was not even considered.

"A steam room for men at the University of Lethbridge was naturally included in the building plans. The women had to complain and refuse to quit using the steam room before a sauna was built for them," she said.

One argument used against female athletes is that they don't play well enough to deserve athletic equality, and there is no point in wasting money, gyms, fields and coaching on them.

But, Schwindt said, "it's hard to say how good female athletes might be if they were offered athletic facilities, support and encouragement even roughly comparable to what men receive."

A double standard is apparent, she said, in that administrators argue sport is essentially educational to develop character, attitude, and good citizenship.

"It's not important whether you win or lose but how you play the game" prevails, yet female athletes are discriminated soft and curvy, but she must not crouch over its neck with her rump in the air.

When examining the female in sport, several opinions ought to be considered. There are several myths concerning the female athlete and also social attitudes towards certain types of sports participation.

Myths:

1) Endangerment of health
The female uterus has been proven to be one of the most shock-resistant of all internal organs. Abigail Hoffman, when she was 15 years old was taken aside by an older woman and told she would have trouble bearing children if she did not stop running.

2) Athletics affect females' sexual behaviour
Dr. Christine Pickard, a London consultant on birth control and sex problems, suggests the opposite. She emphasizes that female athletes tend to make better lovers and are much sexier than less active women. The physical sensations, touch and the ripple of muscles play a central role in the lives of female athletes.

3) Females do not perform well enough to deserve equality in athletics.
A strong opinion was given by Russel Knipp, an American weight lifter. At the Munich Olympics a female was selected to carry the flag at the opening ceremonies. When Knipp learned of this, he said, "The flag-bearer ought to be a man, a strong man, a warrior. A woman's place is in the home."

There are also many social attitudes towards sports participation of women. Aesthetic experience in certain sports has a major influence on the kinds of sports which are usually accepted by the general public. Thus sports which are acceptable by society are gymnastics, synchronized swimming, figure skating, tennis etc. and sports which are unacceptable are pole vaulting, wrestling, basketball, football and ice hockey.

The concern for femininity and the image of the sportswoman was not a concept of the Victorian era only. Early rules of basketball emphasized ladylike behaviour. In 1914, the captain was allowed to talk quietly during play. In 1916, the players were also given the privilege of speaking quietly, "when necessary, but it shall seldom be necessary." During the mid 1920's concern was expressed about the leadership of teams whose players did not wear full-length dark hose with their basketball uniforms. As late as 1960, a rules change was rejected because the statement "the ball may not be snatched" implied rough and unladylike behaviour.

Yet, in socially acceptable sports such as figure skating and gymnastics, the competitor must perform leaps, turns, spins, and a variety of balancing acts without a hint of hesitation or indication of effort.

When women do excel in sport, there are occasional reminders that their accomplishments are going unnoticed by a portion of the sporting public. This is seen in the following quotation: Doris Brown when asked by a television sportscaster after she won the mile in the Seattle Invitational, if she had ever won the distance before, replied, "Oh yes, I hold the world's record."

However, during the past year at least three new 'Women in Sport' publications have come out and this is a step in the right direction.

"Outstanding women competitors show a greater tendency toward introversion, greater autonomy needs, and a combination of qualities suggesting that they are more creative than their male counterparts...Women competitors are more reserved and cool, more experimental, more independent than the male. We attribute this to cultural repression of women-to succeed in any field, a woman has to be able to stand up and spit in the eye of those in charge."

money and facilities are equally allotted to male and female sports; if local media encourage women's sport by fair and adequate coverage despite its current low level of spectator attraction; and if female coaches get the same training male coaches receive.

She said more athletic heroines will be discovered when women's sports are better covered by the press. Young girls would then have more "role models" and not see the female athletes as freaks.

Sports media representatives in the audience said the public only wants to hear about well-attended spectator sports and it wasn't the media's role to push what the public didn't want to hear.

Audience members disagreed, saying the media should be innovative in changing the image of sportswomen, and by giving adequate coverage to an area of sport largely neglected or treated unfairly.

WILL YOU BE WEARING THIS BUTTON WHEN YOU GRADUATE THIS SPRING?

Canada has one of the finest educational systems in the world. But many Canadian employers unjustifiably underpay some very well-educated graduates of that system. Women.

A 24-year-old male, leaving university with a degree, earns on the average 19 per cent more in his first job than a woman of the same age with the same degree. A male high-school graduate can expect an average 34.2 per cent more than the equivalent female graduate. It just isn't right.

It just isn't right, either, that long before graduation, some schools still insist on channelling girls into home economics classes and boys into industrial arts.

Some girls make excellent mechanics and engineers. Some boys make excellent designers and chefs. Why curb their natural talents?

There is no logical reason why we should. Equal educational opportunities are guaranteed us under law, but there are prejudices and precedents. Society expects women to cook and sew because it expects them to get married one day. Don't men get married too? Maybe they should learn household skills as well.

When it comes to employment, the same kind of archaic thinking brings us less pay and recognition. Certainly women get married, but many keep on working. Of some three million women working in Canada today, more than 50 per cent are married. Why are they being paid less than their husbands? Because they are married? How about a single working woman? It costs her as much to live as a single working man. So why is she also being forced to live on less? Particularly when 50.0 per cent of all Canadian women in the labour force, having completed their high-school education, have gone on to take post-secondary training, compared to 39.3 per cent of the men. So no one can use the excuse that working women are less qualified.

The entire situation must change. But if it is to change, we have to start thinking of ourselves as equals. And demanding that others do, too. We have to teach our children to think differently. Because they are the next generation of educators and homemakers, employers and employees. We must break down the barriers of prejudice for ourselves and remove them entirely for our children.

King: Man's use of technology is wrong

by Nancy Bowes

Alexander King, co-founder of the Club of Rome, addressed a receptive audience of staff and students in Dupuis Auditorium Tuesday evening.

King outlined three possible directions the world could take: 1) the atomic bomb 2) a working out of our problems to a satisfactory solution or 3) a frittering away of time and resources to a whimpering end for this world.

Rather than alarming his audience, King advised us quite calmly that we probably have a few decades to decide between the second and third possibilities.

One of the distinctions made early in the lecture was that of the difference between the view in the recent past of growth as a panacea for all ills and the present desire to understand and control our growth. Technology has been man's main weapon in pulling himself up. . . It's not technology that's wrong but man's use of it," King stressed.

King delineated several basic problems, among them the question of the management of bureaucracies, the problem of the long-term vs. the short-term and the question of national sovereignty.

Speaking about the Club of Rome King made it clear that the group is a non-organization. With no budget, the Club of Rome successfully avoids the problem of having a bureaucracy to haggle over and administer funds.

The objective of the Club of Rome is not Zero Population Growth. Rather, they hope to find out more about the world system and to educate the population about "the problematique." One of the projects funded by the Club is called "Renewing the International Order" (RIO). It stresses the importance of establishing an equilibrium, a world harmony. RIO thinks of foreign aid in terms of countries contributing according to their capacities and receiving according to their needs.

"Is there a hope to make these changes? I doubt if we can change human nature in that time," King reasoned. But perhaps the people can be persuaded to "sacrifice immediate self-gratification in the interest of long-term self-interest."

Dr. King gave his audience a spark of hope: "I think it could be achieved." He laid the burden of that achievement on this generation — that is, us.

Referendum to accompany ASUS executive elections

A referendum will be held on Tuesday to decide the future of the ASUS course evaluation guide, and will be held in conjunction with the Arts and Science elections.

Constitutionally, a referendum must be held because $1.50 of the $4.50 faculty fee is presently allocated exclusively for production and publication of the guide.

The executive members feel that the guide is not serving a worthwhile function as it presently exists. Previously run by a three person committee, the evaluation and guide were plagued by problems of over-centralization, which resulted in little Departmental Student Council input into the final product.

Consequently, questionnaire results were not used by the D.S.C. to effect meaningful changes in curriculum and teaching methods within the department.

The executive strongly supports the concept of course evaluation and therefore feels that much of the resources presently spent on a faculty wide guide should be distributed among the individual D.S.C.'s. ASUS will provide the financial resources along with expertise on questionnaires, production and publication if it is requested by the D.S.C.'s.

The second question on the referendum asks that the $1.50 presently allocated for the guide be made available to general society use.

Much of the $1.50 will still be used for evaluation, but at the departmental rather than the faculty level. The remainder will supplement present programs, including the D.S.C.'s, the Lector, and gifts and grants to charities.

Student designs bomb

BOSTON (ZNS CUP)-A 20-year-old M.I.T. chemistry student, working in his spare time with no expert help, has been able to design a home-made nuclear weapon that may pack the explosive force of 2 million pounds of TNT.

The purpose of the experiment was to find out how difficult it would be for underground terrorists to construct their own nuclear weapon for blackmail purposes.

The student, who is described only as in the above average range in scholastic work, has submitted his design to Swedish nuclear experts for criticism. Doctor John Prawitz said, after reviewing the diagram, that there is a "fair chance" that the device would explode with a force of up to 2 million pounds of TNT.

AMS "expertise" to cope with squeeze

A new approach to coping with the tight financial situation at this university has recently been adopted by the AMS government. A committee of students who have been at Queen's for several years has been set up to respond to the report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, which will be released in April.

The AMS committee, struck at the March 6 Outer Council meeting, is not the first to deal with financial cutbacks. Earlier in the year, Council set up a committee to examine "student priorities in light of financial constraint", which delivered its report at the meeting held Feb. 27. In the report several questions were raised such as: "Have we fallen into the trap of allowing the government to make basic decisions on the direction of universities by not making them ourselves?" and "What will be the effect of our high proportion of tenured staff — and the resulting small turnover of faculty?" Although the report was accepted by Council, there appeared to be some dissatisfaction among the council members over the lack of concrete recommendations in the report.

Bruce Trotter, Rector of the University, said he did not feel that students have the time, access to data, or support staff to make actual recommendations.

The initiator of the new committee, Trotter pointed out that the administration has far better resources with which to arrive at solutions, and stressed that it was the students' role to offer a reaction to the recommendations drawn up by the Principal's committee.

When he proposed that the new committee be struck, Trotter offered a list of the people he felt should serve on it. Instead of comprising representatives from the various student societies, the list is made up of students that Trotter felt had "expertise" in the area of university finances and student concerns. He commented, "The committee is heavily weighted towards people who have been here for a long time, who know what the hell is going on, and have some firm ideas about what should be done."

He asserted that it now appears that financial constraint will be with us during the foreseeable future. The first student committee on financial constraint fulfilled its role, he said. Trotter maintained however that as he feels that financial constraint is an ongoing problem, there is a need for this new committee if the AMS is going to remain familiar with the situation and particularly with student views on financial constraint.

We would like to work for you, all 4,500 Arts & Science undergrads, to strengthen our faculty society, the ASUS. We have consulted, planned and organized our selves to offer you a practical solution to campus apathy: us! As the ASUS presidential team we will strive for heightened visibility & credibility of all Artsci students by achieving more awareness of and cooperation in:

- monthly Artsci Council meetings with reports from Senate, AMS, Faculty Bd., ASUS Executive and periodic speakers
- regular (weekly or bi-weekly) publication of the ASUS Lictor with campus-wide contributions to provide: (a) two-way communication between student government bodies and ASUS students; (b) a literary option for the campus at large
- individual DSC operations: autonomy is encouraged for departmental projects and development (ie. successful Course Evaluations in '75) with $1.50 REFERENDUM fee available to DSC's (formerly for ASUS-sponsored Course Evaluation)

- interyear activity: strengthening of year societies; cooperation in social & cultural events
- PHESA: greater autonomy through direct control of $2.00 student interest fee

When you ain't got nothin', you ain't got nothin' to lose

by John D. Wilson V-P University Affairs

It was almost eight months ago in August of '74 when I headed down to Kingston from Hogtown to find a place to live. I was confident that something would be available, it always had been before. I was in for a rude awakening.

The Limestone City that day was full of people running around in a panic. There was nothing left. No houses, no place to live. I got scared. I could see a year spent sleeping in parks and common rooms. My travelling companion was in the same predicament so we spent the day throwing rocks into the lake then drove to Montreal and got drunk on Crescent Street. What else was there to do? We had to forget our homeless state. We got lucky in the end though. I crashed with a well known Queen's athlete until I found a place and she was taken in by friends with an extra room.

You might not be so lucky. The time to locate accommodation for next year is now. You'll have to pay summer rent but that's not a bad alternative to sleeping in cars for eight months.

There are a few ways to facilitate finding a house. I'd like to list them for you.

1. Check into the Housing Management Office regularly.
2. Speak to every graduating student you know he might cough up his place. For that matter talk to every person you know who now has a house, he might be moving.
3. Buy the Whig-Standard and go through the classifieds as often as possible.
4. Speak to any of the big Kingston landlords (If you don't know who they are just ask around, you'll come up with some names).
5. Phone Kingston Real Estate agents, they are often property managers of rentable accommodation.

If you start doing these things now it's almost certain that you will get a roof to sleep under. The certainty of success however, declines rapidly as time goes on. Don't be over confident that you can grasp something in the summer - you might be disappointed. Don't be too fussy and don't have a heart attack when you hear the rents that some veterans are charging.

The most important thing is to get moving now! If you do, and you follow these hints, something is bound to turn up. If you have any questions about the housing situation I'll be glad to talk to you anytime in the A.M.S. office.

ASUS is the central organizational body of the 4500 Artsci Students at Queen's. We conceive of ASUS as the centre of the wheel, the marketplace for incoming and outgoing ideas, and not the unapproachable apex of a hierarchical structure. It has been proven this year that ASUS can succeed with conscientious leadership and direction.

The Artsci Council, established this year, should be continued and improved. It provides necessary interaction and a common ground for the different areas of Artsci student government, and allows for joint discussion and debate on issues confronting students and the university. We intended to maintain the full-time secretary-researcher. An efficient ASUS office insures organization, centrality, and strengthened lines of communication between the various Artsci student organizations.

We want to publish a supplementary "ASUS Calendar" to provide information on scholarships, awards, O.S.A.P., counselling services, and an explanation of the roles of ASUS, DSC's, Faculty Board, etc. We urge you to vote 'yes' for both parts of the accompanying referendum. Faculty-wide Course Evaluation Guides are incomplete and ineffective; evaluations have better quality when initiated from within the particular departments. ASUS provides informational resources and full financial support. Approval of question (b) would allow a more expanded application of the $22,000 budget in DSC special lectures and course evaluation, campus-wide lecture series and symposia, and on newer vein, sponsorship of worthy causes outside the Queen's community.

Bob Atkinson has been president. Arctel 77, treasurer of ASUS, and ASUS Rep on AMS. Cindy Hall has been DSC Chairman, Microbiology, Faculty Board Rep, and a member of the University Council on Athletics. Please vote.

Keith Norton

Into the provincial battleground

by Doug Bonnell

Keith Norton, the thirty-four year old former mayor of Sydneyham ward and the deputy mayor of Kingston recently announced his intention to seek the Progressive Conservative nomination in Kingston-and-the-Islands. In an exclusive interview with Journal columnist Doug Bonnell, Norton explains his political outlook and outlines his views on a variety of issues.

Journal: Mr. Norton, could you begin by briefly analysing the nature of your personal political commitment?

Norton: Politics for me grows out of a concern for people. I can't imagine anything more important or rewarding to me than to be asked to serve the community as a whole. In addition, I have been very much upset about the reputation politics has at the moment as a result of things like Watergate and the alleged scandals both federally and provincially. In my mind there can be no higher calling than politics, and yet people have a great mistrust for the motives that would lead someone to become more involved in politics, and perhaps rightly so. It is the kind of alienation people feel from their government, from the politicians whose very job it is to major role in shaping human beings into what the economy demands.

The definition of people must come before that of the economy. The economy ought to serve the needs of people and we cannot allow it to shape our environment.

Journal: What does such a viewpoint imply structurally? In other words, how can such an attitude be altered?

Norton: Government must play an active role in the economy but an active role confined largely to planning and setting guidelines. Those guidelines must be established with people as the fundamental planning blocks. Government as industrialist has been a disaster and thus, wherever possible within the guidelines set in terms of human needs, individual enterprise ought to be the means by which economic goals are reached.

Journal: You talk a great deal of human alienation but do you not think that the Davis Government has become very much separated from the people of Ontario?

Norton: I think the government has failed at times in terms of its communication with people. When one looks around one realizes that as government grows, and as we expect more and more government involvement in new areas of our collective lives, communication becomes more difficult. I think the government has recognized this problem and has attempted to decentralize the decision-making that has previously been centred in Toronto. Decentralization is very important. People have to be allowed to directly influence the decision-making process.

Journal: What would you regard as the primary issue in the upcoming provincial election?

Norton: The primary issue is bound to be an economic one or rather, most issues will stem from economic conditions. The financial constraints being applied throughout the economy are an example. The principal issue, however, will be one of management and experience and the question as to who can best deal with the kinds of problems that the economy and the western world is taking as they apply to Ontario.

Journal: And how would you defend the record of the Ontario government?

Norton: I don't have to be defensive. The present government's record is self-evident. The position that this government holds not only in Canada but in North America is one of very real economic stability. Surely the triple-A rating on the New York Exchange is evidence of this. I should think that the thrust will be, where do we go from here?

We will have to look to new ways in which we can build upon the large foundation for social development already established in the province.

Journal: As a candidate in Kingston-and-the-Islands, you will be running in a constituency very much concerned with educational policy. In light of the poor working relationship with academic institutions established by James Auld and an intensely negative feeling towards government policy on the part of the administration, and particularly the OPS, how would you defend the PC educational stance in the province?

Norton: We are going through a period of serious economic disorder and one in which the whole of the economy has had to be subjected to constraints. No one sector of the community can bear the economic responsibility more than another.

Second, I do not think that education, has lost any of its importance in affecting government policy. I think it continues to be a high priority of the provincial government but I think we have to recognize that there are shifting priorities.

The government has applied restraints at the post-secondary level but has opened up larger areas in pre-school education and in the area of day care centres specifically. We have to talk in terms of accessibility and I believe that much can be achieved in that area through improved early childhood education.

The issue is really the economy and the point is that it is difficult for everybody right now. We had open-ended funding for education in the sixties. Education is now facing ceilings on the rate of increase while other areas of the economy are facing total cutbacks. I do not believe that the universities have the support of the public at the moment and they are going to have to open up their books to get what they want.

In dealing with the universities the government realizes that there is no more articulate area of the community to voice their objections. And with the OPS and the possibility that they may financially back another party, that is their decision. It is a healthy part of the democratic process for an organization to be politically involved in such a way, provided it does so responsibly.

I for one cannot view restraints as a permanent thing and in the future funding will undoubtedly occur on a more stable basis. The Present restraints, however, may give us time to reflect on where the money is being spent.

Canadian Defence: One of the great bargains of our time?

by R. J. Burnie

Just a short time ago the Federal Government tabled its fiscal year 1975-76 spending estimates in the House of Commons. In a proposed budget exceeding 28 billion dollars, some 2.8 billion (or 9.9 percent) have been earmarked for defence. A tidy sum, one which, although lagging a long way behind Health and Welfare spending, is only a fraction behind the interest paid on the national debt. (Internationally our defence expenditures are much closer to those of Luxembourg than any other of our inflation ridden allies in NATO.)

Yet, in spite of what appears as a relatively modest effort many Canadians think defence is a burden of doubtful value. Some ask: What do Canadians get in return for this investment? How much security does 2.8 billion dollars buy? Is it worth it? If the trend of opinions expressed through the media is a valid indicator, the national consensus seems to be that the less spent on defence the better.

Many people doubt whether Canada can afford to compete in the big league of modern armaments, or whether Canada could effectively defend herself against any aggressor. In particular, they assume that Canada could do nothing if an "energy hungry" neighbour "intervened" in Canadian domestic affairs. So we shrug our shoulders and reluctantly put up with the Defence Department, so long as it doesn't get too expensive.

Given this public apathy, it's easy to see why the Department of National Defence and in particular the Canadian Armed Forces, are such obvious targets of politically motivated austerity programs. In addition they continue to serve as low risk political instruments for demonstrating government support for social initiatives. Enhancing the status of women by recruiting 8,000 females for the forces is a prime example.

If the two articles in the March '75 issue of MacLeans are indicative of the status of defence in Canada the time has come for Canadians, including our political leadership, to look at defence in a new perspective. That perspective should be one that discards the old attitudes and demonstrates that defence can be an important variable in stimulating national awareness and enhancing the confidence of Canadians in their ability to defend the nation effectively.

True, Canadians could opt for a passive defence posture and abandon their reliance on armed forces. But if we want to continue to rely on the Canadian Forces, as the government's white paper "Defence in the '70s" seems to indicate, we must be prepared to accept the consequences and make the resources available to provide effective forces.

Defence Minister Richardson's argument that we would be better off with smaller numbers of men well equipped than larger numbers of poorly equipped men, well equipped, to meet the roles assigned to the forces by the government. What we have had for some time however, is an insufficient number of men with less than satisfactory equipment.

The primary purpose of Canada's defence effort is to "safeguard sovereignty and independence and work for peace and security." To gain a measure of protection from the threat of global nuclear war, Canada joined in the collective defence arrangements of NATO and NORAD. To the extent that these treaties continue to have a stabilizing influence on the international system, Canada's continued participation serves both national interests and the cause of world peace.

Canadian Defence

We need effective conventional forces capable of expressing our national will that will not submit to pressure from any quarter. The Vietnam experience has demonstrated that a nation that believes in itself and is well trained can frustrate the efforts of a large, more powerful state, armed with all the sophisticated paraphernalia of modern technology. In the end it is the cohesion and morale of the people that matter, not who can make the biggest "bang".

The first step is to make people aware that our defence posture is a constructive expression of a Canadian belief in a distinctly Canadian way of life. To support such a move the armed forces should not be isolated from society but rather achieve the highest possible degree of integration in a way that will engage the enthusiasm and enlist the participation of the people in a common task.

We should build on our "citizen army" tradition by developing our armed forces on a small, well equipped professional base and a larger, but equally well equipped militia or reserve component whose training is fully integrated with the regular force. Given adequate financial compensations, including statutory job security while undergoing military training, up to date equipment, and a meaningful role in support of the community, the militia would exemplify the notion of collective citizen responsibility and gradually be re-established as a major ingredient in the preservation of the nation's sovereignty and identity.

An Unmilitary People

Historians reflecting on the Canadian military experience have described it as the "military history of an unmilitary people", an admirable quality in a war-torn world. But while we must constantly guard against excessive militarism, let us not be blind to what social violence there is. Surely the goal of our national defence should be to proclaim to any potential aggressor that Canadians would be as ready and as unrelenting as the people of any other proud nation, to fight for the preservation of our freedom of choice. Such a posture can only be demonstrated through a national defence structure that allows the nation to mobilize its strength at a time and place of its own choosing.

In short, if defence was projected in a straightforward and convincing manner, as an integral part of our collective responsibility and as a guarantee of the nation's future, Canadians might be persuaded that the 2.8 billion dollars are a worthwhile investment. They may even begin to see our national defence forces as positive and rewarding factors in the life of the nation, rather than as dubious burdens imposed by remote strategy and vain consideration of status and prestige.

In theatre

An Anthology

In plays by great writers such as Shaw, Ibsen, and Brecht, women are central figures, rebelling against domesticity. But never do the authors suggest that woman is forced into the domestic role by being a member of a masculine society.

Using the above statement as the basis for its prologue, Theatre presented an hour and a half of songs, excerpts from plays and short skits on Saturday night. Performing for an enthusiastic audience of about fifty people, of whom a quarter were male, the company explored the various roles of women as they're seen through the theatre. Members of the group of five men and four women competently acted scenes from The Glass Menagerie by Tennessee Williams, A Doll's House by Ibsen, Shaw's The Apple Cart, Roots by Arnold Wesker, and a short piece by fifteenth century writer George Farquharson. As one of the players pointed out, all the plays are written by men and the women are therefore seen only from a masculine viewpoint.

Between the play excerpts, songs such as "As Long As He Needs Me" provided variety, as did two well-executed skits en-itled "Henny Penny" and "The Fly's Wedding", both of which displayed the company's talent for comedy.

At the end of the performance the players came out to talk to the audience and to elicit ideas and suggestions. Theatre is currently negotiating for space in Kingston, in order to start a workshop for all those interested in theatre. They are hoping that they can enliven the Kingston theatrical scene, with the assistance of Kingstonians and Queen's students alike.

On film

"Women on the March"

The International Women's Day celebration started with a historical flavour featuring the National Film Board presentation "Women on the March". The saga of the Women's Liberation Movement was traced from its British and American origins to the United Nations' Council on the status of women. The conviction of early libbers Susan B. Anthony and Emmeline Pankhurst has not deteriorated since universal suffrage has been granted. Having gained a political voice, women have tried to use it effectively though statistics show that they frequently support male candidates.

in the Workshops

Rape and Abortion

Are women at Queen's truly not interested in the issues of concern to other women throughout the western world? Or were they simply unable to tear themselves away from the books in order to attend the movie, play and workshops at the AMS sponsored International Women's Day at Queen's?

The Rape and Abortion workshops were attended by six and twelve females respectively.

At the Abortion Workshop, twelve curious females listened and contributed to a discussion of the relative merits of moving abortion from the "criminal Code. They wanted it to be a decision made by the individual. This conclusion obviously coincided with the views of the discussion leader, a member of the Canadian Association for the Repeal of Abortion Laws, who actively solicited support for the Association after the discussion. Perhaps because of her obvious one-sidedness, the conversation remained low-key with few controversial issues and little new material coming to light.

Following this rather subjective treatment of Abortion, the Rape Workshop provided objectively presented information. The participants were exposed to a brief outline of the processes followed by an attorney attempting to convict a person of rape. It became increasingly evident as the session progressed that chances of successfully convicting the defendant are very slim. In addition to verifying the identity of the victim, the attorney must prove beyond "reasonable doubt" that the crime was committed with intent. This implies that the defendant knew what he was doing and was not inebriated (since this can be used as an excuse everywhere except in British Columbia). It was also pointed out that the more beaten you are, the better your chances in court of winning the case. Such "logic" discourages women from pressing charges.

As with most of those things which men consider their possessions, women continue to be assaulted despite sincere efforts on the part of a few to revolutionize our attitudes.

Unfortunately, the discussion leaders failed to create the atmosphere of a workshop. Rather than attempting to elicit suggestions for change or comments from the small group in attendance, they conducted one-sided, lecture-like sessions.

Women in Sports

At this workshop, participants discussed fiction that is perpetuated and facts that are kept hidden. Schools, the communicative media, recreation authorities and the Canadian culture itself have all served to perpetuate myths regarding female participation in athletics and have all too often turned girls and women away from sports.

The subject of cleanliness standards of the Women's Locker Room at the Phys. Ed. Centre was raised. Participants suggested that the locker room is not cleaned because all of the maintenance staff at the Phys. Ed. Centre is male.

Angry questions did not receive satisfactory answers. As they strayed from sports to women at Queen's in general, women asked, "Why are there no sanitary protection dispensers in the Phys. Ed. Centre or the Union?" "Why do females account for only 7.5 per cent of the Queen's faculty?" "Why is mediocrity accepted from the male professors but somehow not tolerated from the female professors?" "Why are male graduate students encouraged and female graduate students discouraged from enrolling in post-graduate degree programs?"

The workshop has stimulated its participants into action. They are determined to make such posts as Women's Affairs Officer (in the External Affairs Commission) a viable, legitimate station.

Men's Liberation

What keeps men from being nurses or secretaries? This was one of the questions raised in a wide-ranging discussion at the Men's Liberation workshop. The participants—nine women and five men—insisted that men need to be released from the confines of stereotyped social behaviour as badly as women do. Men are discouraged from undertaking secretarial or nursing careers because "those jobs have feminine ascriptions", one person said, and other agreed, pointing out the strong ideological barriers to a man joining a steno pool and the hostility from co-workers and patients encountered by male nurses. The main factor keeping men out, it was argued, is that it is hard to support a family on the low pay received by workers in jobs of this type.

The participants generally agreed, however, that members of the women's movement should first concentrate on enlightening and encouraging the participation of other women before they turn to stress other aspects of the freedom movements, such as men's liberation. Several people complained of the difficulty of enlisting support at Queen's. "It's very role-orientated here at Queen's", one person observed, "women can't emphasize at all." Another suggested that too many Queen's women come to university mainly in order to obtain their M.R.S. rather than for academic reasons. "There's no level of consciousness here", was one comment.

Family and property law

Seventeen women and two men attended the workshop on family and property law led by law students Beth Symes and Christina MacNaughton. Various laws governing the relation of women and property were discussed. Included were the provisions of the proposed Ontario Bill 117 which was drafted to define the position of a wife when she and her husband operate a business together. There were gasps of amazement from the group as they were told about some of the archaic Ontario family laws which still exist in which the woman is merely considered to be the property of her husband.

Recommendations discussed concerning human rights legislation in the area of labour were:

1. That Ontario and Federal legislation recognize equal remuneration (wages and fringe benefits) for work of equal value, work of equal value being determined by parameters of skill, value, and responsibility, as set out in the International Labour

2. That legislation be passed guaranteeing paid maternity leave with the right to return to the same job with accumulated seniority.
3. That discriminatory clauses in legislation that effectively eliminate women from certain job categories be abolished.
4. That protective clauses in legislation be extended to all workers.
5. That the power of investigation and enforcement of the proposed Federal Human Rights Commission include the initiation of investigation without the written consent of complainant.

Concerning family and property law, the following recommendations were discussed:

1. Marriage is a partnership with each spouse having an equal share in the venture.
2. Marriage contracts which create rights with respect to wage division, division of child care, division of assets should be enforceable in the courts.
3. When a marriage breaks up, a spouse should be entitled to maintenance in order to regain the skills necessary to support him-herself if he/she lost those skills due to the role he/she assumed during the marriage. Fault shall play no part in determining maintenance.
4. The concept of illegitimacy with respect to children should be abolished. The term "children" in all laws should be interpreted to mean both legitimate and illegitimate children. For example: A child born out of marriage should inherit on an equal basis with other children born in marriage if a mother dies leaving no will or if in her will she used the words "to my children."
5. The following civil actions should either be abolished or changed in Ontario:
  - harbouring a wife, loss of consortium of a wife, breach of promise to marry, criminal conversation (alienation of affection).

Firings clarified

Dear Editor:

I feel I should respond to Mr. Gage's letter in last Tuesday's Journal. There seems to be a common misunderstanding with regards to Mrs. Roe's position within the A.M.S.

First, let me state that Mrs. Roe fulfills the role of three different positions for the A.M.S. Mrs. Roe is Business Administrator, Treasurer and Personnel Manager for the A.M.S. The latter position was established by the Board of Directors two years ago and gives Mrs. Roe control over all salaried personnel of the A.M.S. with the exception of constables. Since the Pub Manager and his staff are salaried personnel, Mrs. Roe did have the authority to hire and fire those people. In addition, however, because of changes in the L.L.B.O. regulations with regard to the Pub, it was necessary to have a person to be the official manager of the Pub who would not change every year. The decision reached by the executive couple of months ago was that Mrs. Roe would be the Pub Manager. As such, Mrs. Roe must have control over the operation of the Pub and the staff who works there.

Turning to the area of accountability, Mrs. Roe has always been responsible to the Vice-President (Operations), Outer Council, the Executive and the Board of Directors. Her actions are always taken on the advice of one or more of these bodies and cannot be implemented without the authority of one of them.

I would like to point out to Mr. Gage, and all other people who are concerned, that had they asked their A.M.S. Representatives, or their Society Presidents, or myself, about this matter, they would have been told that I announced the action to Outer Council. As the appropriate elected officer of the A.M.S., the action was my responsibility and questions on this issue should have been directed to me as they were at the Outer Council meeting.

With regards to Miss Simpson, she was informed of the reason for her dismissal. This was done at a meeting on the particular Wednesday afternoon and by letter the following day. I should explain that at that meeting there were present, in addition to Mrs. Roe, Miss Simpson and Mr. Sterling, Messrs. Beech, Druxman, and Gray of the outgoing executive and myself, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Gray of the incoming executive, all of whom agreed with the decision.

In closing, I would like to say that I can understand that people reading the Journal article would assume that Mrs. Roe had taken unilateral action. Had the Journal chosen to interview other people who were concerned with this decision, this impression would have been avoided. However, I cannot take responsibility for the reporting procedures of this newspaper. That is the responsibility of the Editor-in-Chief.

I would hope that this will end this matter as far as public letters to the Journal is concerned. However, should questions still be unanswered, I would ask people to contact me through the A.M.S. office at 547-6165 or 547-6166.

Yours sincerely,

Better than a Frat house

Co-op," explains Science '44 representative Andrew Anderson, "is that the Frat house today would have no real meaning." The Fraternity is a thing of the past because people presumably are no longer concerned with a person's family background and are less inclined to be thought of in terms of what their parents have done.

possible to go for weeks, never using more energy than it takes to nod at the maid to begin dusting the furniture and making the bed.

Though life in the co-operative may provide greater individual responsibility, it is not entirely a bed of roses.

This is best illustrated by the disturbing situation which arose in the Madison Community Co-op in Wisconsin when one house member refused to obey the regulation that there were no dogs allowed in the house despite the fact that several signs were posted. He continued to bring pets into the house and was later seen nailing a sign to the living room wall that read, "please don't step in the dog shit." Problems of this nature often bring people in co-operatives together.

Student co-ops are a relatively new phenomenon which evolved from the quickly disappearing Frat house, which were phased out at Queen's thirty years ago when a young frosh was stripped and tied to Macdonald's statue and left there overnight. He later died of pneumonia. Originally frat houses were designated as either male or female and required that all residents have marks hovering around the "A" level. Since that time, requirements have been relaxed considerably.

The difference between the Frat house and the ican counter-part in that it receives a great deal of support from the government. Consequently American co-operatives have developed a high degree of organization in their struggle to receive support from the government. This struggle has given rise to a small hard-working core of what one co-op resident termed the "productive hippie" which can organize the pants off any organization.

Elrond and Science '44 at Queen's have developed a highly organized, entirely student-run operation which tackles easily any dealings with auditors, inspectors and management consultants.

Student responsibility is considerable in view of the erican Students of Co-operation (NASCO) co-operatives throughout Canada keep in touch and distribute up-to-date information on new developments in co-operative living. At a recent convention held at Queen's Elrond College, representatives from as far away as Texas gathered for seminars on how to improve the living conditions in a co-op as well as some extra-curricular activities. Problems which arise in co-ops throughout the States and Canada were shared and reviewed.

The Canadian co-op has one advantage over its Amer-fact that the investment of Science '44 alone totals over one million dollars. Science '44 co-ops were purchased with the help of the Canadian Mortgage and Housing Corporation (CMHC) which offers generous support in the form of low-rate mortgages. Approximately 30 per cent of fees paid by co-op residents go toward paying mortgages which expire in 1992.

Students involved, impress local representatives of the CMHC at meetings in which Science '44 and Elrond books are audited. Auditors are invited to the co-op house of their choice, and are offered a beer: they decide then to check out the co-op's books. The co-operative's organization is simultaneously casual and efficient. Local auditors have been known to grumble over who gets to audit the co-op books!

This system of living is meeting with increasing success and is on the upsurge from the middle sixties when much adverse publicity gave them a bad name. Rochdale, the most infamous co-op in Canada, was eventually shut down completely because of its reputation for illicit activities.

In the last several years, expensive high rise co-ops like Elrond, Pestalozzi in Ottawa and Neil Wylie in Toronto have been designed, supervised and run by students alone. The Ontario government takes large steps to support the students in involved through direct funding, leaving almost all details to be worked out by students whose work, including hiring architects, engineers and contractors, is subject to government approval.

Most student planned housing has met with success. One exception was the construction of Toronto's Neil Wylie in which the student-hired architect destroyed the plans to the building half-way through the completion of construction. New plans were drawn up and the architect was fired. The top floors which were improvised when the plans were destroyed now provide students with the comfort of Cadillac homes and a feeling of personal security equivalent to living in the Towering Inferno.

According to the standards of the Madison Community Co-operative, there are six major aims: open membership, democratic control, limited interest or invested membership capital, equitable distribution or application of savings, continued education and co-operation among co-ops.

Living in a student-run co-operative is certainly a viable alternative for any student who wishes to live in a group situation and gain social and economical control over his environment.

THE RIDING CLUB is having a trail ride this Sat. Everyone welcome! Interested please call 544-9328. The bus will leave the Union at 9.30 am. Take a break from your studies and get some fresh air. Cost $3.00.

YOU'VE BEEN FROM FROTH TO Q.M.T.S.M.: There's been Chris, Larry, Geoff, Dana and the sweetheart engineers, not to mention the two nights you didn't come home, the first time you did (Ah!) and the second you did (Aw...). Anyway, happy 19th - imagine what's to come. Love from the telephone pests.

TO ALL MY FRIENDS, young and old: You each have a heart made of gold; I just want to say that I had a great day. And give thanks to you all many fold. Goldilocks.

P.S. Happy Birthday Thumper. VANCOUVERITES: Want a great trip home this summer? I have my own car and plan to drive through the states. I want a couple of people to share the driving and small expenses. Call Dave after 6, 544-7340.

Cand A: Now that we've had a nice red picnic spread, why not come over (bring your buns, we'll supply the cream)? You'll have to bring your own cherries... ours are saaggy. Passionately, R and G.P.S.: You animals can eat our crackers anytime. P.P.S.

CHER AND AL: The time has come. The walrus said. To speak of many things, of crackers, cream and cherries galore, and the laughter memories bring. Thanks for all, Luv and Kisses—The Commie Assholes.

ATTENTION FRIENDS, LOVERS, ENEMIES, ETC., of Donald (Donny) James Kirk. Let it be known to all that on Saturday, March 15th, Mr. Kirk BEGINS the third decade of his existence. You are hereby invited to join him in the Union Pub this Saturday, to partake in the celebration of the passing of his 19th year. (In other words, it's his birthday, and he wants to put away a few beer with anyone who feels he's worth drinking with.) P.S. The "etc." includes 3D, 3B, 3rd Chwen (that's you Judy) 2nd Gordon, Phil, Doug, Steve, Bob, Joy, Ol, Tim, Gaei Group No. 70, Jennifer, Barb, Liz, Laurie, the L.A. Rams, and the entire cast of "O.C. Calcutta" in full costume.

THE RESIDENTS OF "THE CLERGY RESERVE" (95) are raging once again this evening. All friends and relatives are cordially invited to attend. BTOB and W. Beer available.

Anna Wyman

Too much clockwork

by Dana
The Anna Wyman Dance Theatre marks the end of the Vibrant Stage Series for the 1974-75 season. This company of contemporary dance presented an evening of five works. Unfortunately there didn't seem to be a tremendous variety in those five works. The numbers all shared a common eye for patterns, and a very keen sense of overall design, but at the same time the movements were consistently calisthenic.

The choreographic trend was that of very angular geometric shapes almost like a series of poses that seemed to eliminate another whole world of dance. Similar moves were used repeatedly, the dancers would move in and out of the same postures over and over again and the basic 'mechanicalness' of most of the movements all contributed to an evening that at times became predictable and therefore unexciting. What the dancers did do was done technically very well, the group was well synchronized and exact, but I have the feeling that some of the dancers were capable of doing much more interesting and more energetic dance.

In the one number "Dance Is" some of the company members displayed a real talent for expression that I found lacking in the rest of the programme. The miming of sports activities to demonstrate the relation of everyday activities to the kinds of skills in dance was definitely the highlight of the evening.

Anna Wyman certainly displayed through her choreography a very keen sense of the art of designing overall patterns, but I have a feeling that she could use some of the dancer's abilities to do some more expressive dance. I came out of the performance feeling that I hadn't really seen anyone dance. I mean really dance, really tell me something, really give that free spirit and energy and life that dancers are capable of. For one brief moment in Part III of the dance "Peacemaker" two of the dancers, one male and one female, came together in a duet, and for that brief time I was taken with a tension and feeling that all the other dance had avoided. But regrettably it was over too soon.

My lasting impression of the evening can be described in terms of a kaleidoscope. The bright colours, the angular movement, the sharp lighting effects and the rigid atonal music all contributed to a kaleidoscopic effect, that was definitely pleasing to the eye, but there was so little distinction between the various dances that I think in two or three days time I will have difficulty in sorting out what I saw.

I would have to say that I think this group is a very capable young group but I would like to see a broader attempt on their part to explore different choreographic techniques.

Drama Dept.

Phantoms or dreams

Phantoms, three one-act plays by the Japanese writer Yukio Mishima, will open in Convocation Hall on Thursday, 20 March, as the third major production of the Department of Drama's 1974-75 season. The plays will continue through the 22nd, then again between 27-29 March.

The three plays concern themselves with the intricacies of love, with passion, jealousy, and longing, and with the phantoms they create around us. In the first of the three plays, "Hana", a lover returns to his deranged mistress after a three year absence, only to find that her yearning for him has turned into something neither of them expected. In "The Lady Aoi", a beautiful young woman, strangely ill in hospital, is visited by her husband late at night. Before long his former mistress arrives to claim her lost love and to revenge herself upon his wife. However, we learn that this woman is at that very moment asleep at home. Is it she? Is it her spirit? What is the nature of the wife's illness? In "The Masked Drum", an old man falls in love with a beautiful and fashionable woman. Ridiculed by her and her friends, he commits suicide, but returns from the dead to claim her. The woman answers his summons, hoping thereby to find the love she has missed in life.

Mishima based these plays on the traditional Japanese No drama, but they are contemporary and realistic. The settings are a hospital room, an artist's studio, a law office, and a couturier's shop; the language is modern; and the costumes, combining both Western and Japanese dress are contemporary. Into this familiar world, however, come spirits, ghosts, haunting memories—phantoms.

The plays are directed by Maurice Breslow with music by Richard Bronskill. The action takes place on a sketched set of Japanese arches created by Russ Waller. Tickets are available at the door and from the Drama Desk. (547-6291) from 9:00 a.m. through 5:00 p.m. weekdays. Show times are 8:30 p.m. March 20-22, and 27-29, and ticket prices are students $1.00 and non-students $2.00 on Thursdays and Fridays and Saturdays $2.00 and $3.00.

How much should you drink?

Everyone has a limit, and overindulgence of any sort — in work or play, food or drink — does nothing good for you.

Fortunately, most Canadians aren't interested in proving anything when it comes to beverage alcohol. They look on their favorite drink not as a challenge, but as a pleasure to be enjoyed in moderation.

How much should you drink? To most people that's no problem. But if it is a problem to someone you know, why not urge that person to see a physician. You may well be doing him or her a favor.

Auditions for The Fantasticks

This spring the Queen's Drama Guild and the Queen's Own Players will present a production of The Fantasticks. The Fantasticks, billed as 'a parable about love, is written by Tom Jones with the music by Harvey Schmidt. The musical opened on Broadway in 1960, and is still running.

Auditions for the production will be held on March 24 and 25 from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. in the Dance Studio on the top floor of the Physical Education Complex. All Queen's students and staff are welcome to come and audition.

The parts in the musical include El Gallo, the mysterious narrator, Matt and Luisa, the young romantic leads, two fathers of the leads, Mortimer, an American Indian, Henry, a Shakespearean actor, and the Mute.

Students triumph once again

The Voice of Students triumphs once more. Due to excessive harassment by hordes of hungry scholars, the administration has succumbed to the protests of the Queen's populace and has extended the hours of the coffee shop in the basement of the Union.

Seeking to avoid a riot, the coffee shop will now open its doors from 7:30am to 5:00pm Monday to Thursday for full grill service and then from 7:30p.m. to 10:00p.m. for snacks.

On Friday, the hours will extend only from 7:30a.m. to 5:00 p.m. while on Saturday and Sunday, the shop will be open from 11:00a.m. to 7:00 p.m. for full grill service and 7:00p.m. to 7:30 for snacks.

OWIAA Sports Summary

A total of 5 O.W.I.A.A. Championships were won by Queen's University this year. This is an exceptional achievement as it indicates one third of the association championships sponsored by the O.W.I.A.A. Queen's has 215 athletes competing on 21 teams, representing one of the most comprehensive programs for women in Canada.

Two championship teams successfully defended their team championship title: Synchronized Swimming for the third successive year, and Figure Skating for the third successive year also.

Ice Hockey regained the O.W.I.A.A. title this year, making this the second championship in three years for the tricolor squad. The O.W.I.A.A. title in Curling comes to Queen's Gals this year for the first time in the history of the new association (founded in 1971).

The Intermediate Volleyball team won the O.W.I.A.A. Intermediate Championship for the first time.

Seventeen women captured O.W.I.A.A. individual championships. Eight others qualified for C.W.I.A.U. Nationals and participated on the championship conference team. In addition, outstanding performances were displayed by women's teams in non-association events.

Once again, the women's teams have won more than trophies and Championships. They have achieved the admiration and respect of opponents throughout intercollegiate sport on both sides of the border for the sportsmanship, expertise and "the terribly impressive Queen's spirit and esprit de corps" which has become a tradition at this university.

Colour Night

Bews News

HOCKEY

Arts '76 took its second championship last week as they capped a perfect season by downing Arts '77, 4-2. The champions won the first encounter 3-2 and finished off the contest in the second game of a best of three finals. Congratulations to Al Bell and Arts '76.

BALL HOCKEY

Reversing the outcome of the ice hockey championships, Arts '77 held off a strong and determined Arts '76 team by winning two games to none 2-0 and 2-1. This gives Arts '77 the Ball Hockey championship for the second year in a row.

BASKETBALL

The outcome of the basketball finals again saw P.H.E. take the championships over Meds as they beat the medical boys two games to none. The scores were 34-26 and 42-37.

HANDBALL DOUBLES Bew Champs - Buttrey-Harding (Independent) Runner-up - Sawyers-Carroll (Arts '77)

TABLE TENNIS Paul Brathworth of Law '75 beat out Li Kan-Kei of Eng. Grads to take the table tennis championships.

SINGLES BADMINTON

Mike Hellenington of Arts '76 was able to outdo Al Hayes of Arts '77 to capture the Badminton championship.

DOUBLES BADMINTON

The Krams-Mutch team from the Medical faculty were able to hold off a strong challenge by the Arts '76 team of Cawley-Hamilton to gain the crown for this years Bews Championship.

BROOMBALL

This years broomball title goes to Arts '77 who were able to overcome Comm. '77 in overtime play with a score of 2-1. This gave them the championship after winning two games to one. Congratulations to the Arts '77 competitors.

230 beds needed

It is no secret to most students that a very tight housing situation is anticipated for next year.

"Approximately 230 more beds are needed for Queen's students next year" was the statement made by George Wattsford, Director of University Services. With the limited number of housing starts in Kingston for next fall, he sees the situation as not being sufficient to meet the requirements of the estimated population growth.

Presently, Queen's is attempting to provide its students with additional housing accommodations. It is through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, (CMHC) that enough financial backing can be obtained to provide for any future units.

Although the Housing Committee has tentative plans for future housing accommodations, it is hesitant to reveal them without the assurance from the CMHC. "We don't want to blow things out of proportion and then come home empty-handed" commented

Thrift

In a meeting with the Subcommittee on Housing last week, Wattsford reviewed all the new Kingston housing starts for this summer which will "slightly ease" the pressure from Kingstonians. He cited a new 400 home unit, a 160 room apartment and a 100 room new rental unit. He commented that "construction wasn't standing still, but it's not going ahead with great leaps and bounds".

Wattsford also pointed out, more importantly, potential alternatives for more student accommodations next year. He mentioned the Frontenac Hotel with approximately 25 rooms for students next year. These are both single and double room units with communal bathrooms.

The Committee is also looking into the possibility of incorporating more students into the Elrond apartments. According to the Director of Elrond College these additional beds will provide more revenue for Elrond as well as emphasize the "co-operative" attitude of Elrond's living style.

"The most promising thing on the horizon", Wattsford pointed out is the Jeanne Manse Residence in Hotel Dieu. There is about 100 rooms not presently being used. However, major renovations on this building would have to be financed by the university.

Panelists focus on Watergate

by Nancy Howes
Five eminent political scientists gathered in the Ellis Hall Auditorium Saturday morning for a panel discussion entitled "The American Political System through Watergate and Recession."

The host, Richard Simeon, and the members of the panel, Geoff Smith, Peter Bachrach, Michael Parenti and Theodore Lowi, discussed the problems that are plaguing America and the possible solutions.

Geoff Smith, of the Queen's History Department, spoke of Watergate as a precedent in American scandals in that it concerned not sex or financial fraud but politics. Smith attributed Nixon's lack of support during the crisis to the fact that he used up his political credit well before 1973. And thus "another basis that could have helped him in the Watergate problem was swept away."

According to Smith, the major ramifications of Watergate are the decreased strength of the executive and, on Ford's part in particular, a greater sensitivity to the public.

Peter Bachrach stressed the contradictions in American society, notably the tension between the powerful and the powerless. He put forth a reason for the lack of interest on the part of the American people concerning Watergate. "The people of America did not care about Watergate in the summer of 1973 because it was not their system—it was the system of the crooks in Washington."

Regarding the aftermath of Watergate, Bachrach warned that "America is only superficially stable." As a final paradox in America, he pointed out the need for profit and the need to live in a sane world.

Michael Parenti spoke exuberantly about the problems and the systemic solutions he favours. Parenti senses the dissatisfaction of the American public. In explaining why things have gone wrong, Parenti insists that issues such as pollution and shabby treatment of the elderly must be seen as the rational extension of an irrational system. He objects to the liberal reaction of considering the issues irrational aberrants of a basically rational system.

In concluding, Parenti stressed the task that lies ahead of us all, we must learn to think of our neighbours, not as competitors and enemies, but as brothers and sisters.

Theodore Lowi cautioned the audience not to underestimate the influence of the federal system on American politics. He asked the audience to consider the very size and scope of the American political system as a plausible reason for its problems. Lowi was most concerned, however, with the system's tyrannical nature.

Unfortunately, there was not much time for audience participation. When the guests finished speaking, supposedly for only ten minutes each, there was time for only three questions.

During this brief discussion, Peter Bachrach posed a theory to explain many of the problems. "The American is a mass man... there is no dialogue between him and his fellow man." Bachrach made it clear that it is time to start building a line of communication.

Summer courses in Brockville

The Department of Extension at Queen's University has announced plans for four summer term courses in Brockville from July 2 to August 13 this year.

Offered are: Introductory Psychology, which is a first year course; Abnormal Psychology; the History of Europe since 1670; and the Sociology of Race and Ethnic Relations, all second year courses. Nature, Science and Man is also being offered as two half courses taken together and is normally taken by students in second to fourth years.

An interdisciplinary course, Nature, Science and Man, Parts I and II, has proven "exceedingly popular and stimulating among the full-time students", according to Ross Wardle, Director of Extension.

The course will be presented to Brockville students mainly by means of video tape programs which will be introduced and discussed by the course instructors, Professor R.H. Clark and Mr. Bruce Trotter.

Part I of the course is designed to provide the background necessary for informal discussion of current human problems relating to the environment. In Part II some of these problems will be dealt with in detail to focus on their interdisciplinary nature and complexity.

"It should be especially appropriate for teachers who are discussing world issues", Mr. Wardle said. Nature, Science and Man is presented on video tape by lecturers from some 20 university departments and by special speakers from industry and government.

Classes will take place five days a week in the morning.

The registration deadline for the courses is June 15. Students who have never taken a Queen's course before must first be admitted to the University by June 1. They will then be able to register in the course of their choice. Each course is $120.

Since the Nature, Science and Man courses are of general interest, a number of citizens might like to enrol as auditors for a fee of $25. Auditors sit in on classes, but do not try the examination nor receive credit for the course.

Minimum enrolment for the courses is 15 students. Once the number of students per class is established, a suitable location for the class will be announced.

Busit ends

The 1974-75 Busit program is scheduled to terminate March 30th. This is in accordance with the agreement between the AMS and the Public Utilities Commission of Kingston.

The Busit program has run for the last six months and fell under prolonged bargaining arrangement for a bus service. An agreement was finally reached which reduced the charge to $6 for a shorter version of the program.

Coffee Shop

In mid-February, it was announced that the Coffee Shop in the basement of the Union would continue operations on a reduced-hours schedule. The Coffee Shop was losing money and could no longer afford to stay open such long hours.

Since then, protest by the students has caused the hours to be extended. The coffee shop will now open its doors from 7:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Monday to Thursday for full grill service and then from 7:30 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. for snacks.

On Friday the hours will extend only from 7:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. On Saturday and Sunday full grill service will be offered from 11:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. and from 7:00 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. for snacks.

Support the coffee shop, try to drink the coffee!

does not go straight from lamp to negative, but is deflected downwards by a mirror. Heat escapes not only through lamphouse vents but also from back of mirror. Lamp may be raised and lowered, as well as rotated to ensure precise centering with mirror. Illumination is totally even, yet retains the crispness of a condenser enlarger.

Queries and problems should be addressed to Mr. Darkroom, Braun Electric Canada Ltd, 3269 American Drive, Mississauga, L4V 1B9. When sending in a problem print, please enclose negative and as much detail as to exposure and equipment used as possible.

MR. DARKROOM

It was my original intention to outline the mechanics of developing a film and making a black and white print in this and future columns. These are, however, covered very thoroughly and simply in my Mr. Darkroom wall chart. Photographs and copy take you through the 6 easy steps to the negative and 9 stages to a finished print. These are yours for the asking, and many persons have already done so. Along with these requests come many queries, "Why should I do my own developing and printing?" This column will give you many reasons.

Darkroom work is exciting and creative. It allows you to put the finishing touch (no pun intended) on the creativity started with the exposure made in your camera. The imagination shown in printing puts your personal stamp on the work.

Your darkroom technique gradually becomes an extension of your ability with a camera. For example this originality can be shown in the form of picture composition of other than the customary square or oblong format. Many examples come to mind — a sunset, cropped to full horizon width but only two or three inches high, or a slender tree printed in a vertical format no wider than is necessary to include the actual tree. I'm sure you can think of many more, and looking at the prints you have from previous shooting you will see many different cropping possibilities. Selective cropping gives impact to the subject matter by removing unnecessary detail from the finished print. This cropping is done by raising and lowering the enlarger head to obtain proper size and using the variable arms of the easel to mask the image to exactly what you want to show.

The adage "He walks best, who first learns to creep" was never more true than when applied to darkroom work. The basics that determine a successful print are not as glamorous as many techniques to produce special print effects, yet without these fundamentals, no print is really successful. There are many things you can do to gather this knowledge. First, make your source of supply a dealer knowledgeable in darkroom and

A new outlook for Infobank

by Harry S. Binks

Information Bank is being run by a club next year. Unusual? Yes, but so is the fact that the club is going to be using the facilities of InfoBank to further its own purposes and goals.

Circle K has but one purpose: providing services to people. We have two goals: getting students, not just those in the club, involved with university life; and furthering campus-community relations in any way possible.

The major innovation is the addition of a service along the lines of a Better Business Bureau. The Chamber of Commerce in Kingston was extremely interested in the Better Business Bureau concept, and had asked representatives from the national organization to come to Kingston. Unfortunately, it was felt that the population of Kingston at this time was such that a Bureau could not be supported to the tune of $30,000 to $40,000 a year.

Aftermath: the fact remained that such a service is vital and necessary to a community if business and consumers are to remain in harmony with each other. This is where we stepped in.

Operations of the new service won't begin until the fall. We can't call it a Better Business Bureau, of course, but we will be naming it soon. One of the most important things to emphasize is that the consumer service will be open to the whole city of Kingston. Too often, a student-run service has the potential to serve the whole community, and winds up being selfish. Why? It's something we've simply got to try and correct. More, more, more, will be made known to the general public soon; right now, things are still in the formative stages, and we have to be careful what we say.

InfoBank will try to centralize the three or four randomly-operated lost-and-found on campus. An extensive documenting of all events and projects undertaken on campus is planned; it is our belief that many people come to Queen's intending to and wanting to get involved, but find that there is no easy way to find out how an event is organized, how much it will cost, who to see about equipment, rooms and so on, and what time of year is most successful for that kind of event. In reality, people new to Queen's don't want vague generalizations when they ask for help; they want detail. And here is where each of the clubs and faculty societies will be able to provide input. Eventually, all that input is going to pay off to the organizations that help: InfoBank is on its way to becoming a real information bank. The information will be compiled over the course of a year, and then compacted, thus providing an ever-growing body of information about activities, up-dated once a year, and providing a valuable service to university life.

Other innovations will come as time goes on: the ride board should be moved upstairs from the basement; information will be collected from safety associations; Federal and Provincial Government sources, and industry; and many other things.

One thing will not change: InfoBank's need for ordinary students to give an hour of their time each week to man the John Orr Room. InfoBank has been run like this since its inception, and it is essential that it remain like this. There is no special knowledge needed: all you do is answer the phone, hand a form to someone to fill out, look something up in the files, and be cheerful. An hour a week: you'd be amazed at what you'll pick up.

Queen's Circle K Club will use InfoBank for programs of stimulating awareness: the problems of alcoholism, learning disabilities, too little environmental action, consumer difficulties, and so on.

We can stimulate awareness; we know that. It remains to be seen if we can stimulate the student. Wish us luck.

"Take it away CFRC announcer!"

CFRC is here all year around

by Julia Sikes.
"Summer is a comin' in"... and with it much of the general activity around campus grinds to a halt. Summer in Kingston is a time when, even though you have a choice of tables in the pub on Saturday night, you wish it wasn't quite so quiet in there. Kingston does, however, continue to exist during the summer months, despite losing a large chunk of its population. And from the heart of campus there continues to function one of Queen's most active student clubs - CFRC, Queensradio.

CFRC and CFRC-FM are two of the few Canadian radio stations that are operated by students, and one of the even fewer University activities that has a responsibility to serve the community as well as the University itself. This it does by providing the listening public with programmes that, although exceptionally varied in content, have one basic objective: "alternative" radio for Kingston.

During 1974, the CFRC studios, situated in the basement of Carruthers Hall, underwent major renovations which both modernized and expanded existing facilities and equipment. The station now has three control rooms and four studios, as well as a rapidly expanding record library, lounge and office space.

CFRC is at present equipped to broadcast on both AM and FM frequencies, with the transmitters being located next door in Fleming Hall. CFRC, broadcasting at 1490, has a power output of 100 watts; CFRC-FM, at 91.9, 1270 watts. This in effect means that the AM signal can be picked up within a radius of approximately 20 miles; the FM signal can be heard over 25 miles from campus in good conditions. It is encouraging to the station to hear from regular listeners in northern New York state, and it has been known for the signal to be picked up in Ohio!

Although the on-campus location of the stations is advantageous to the large numbers of students involved with the running of CFRC, it presents one major drawback. When the transmitters are turned on, they cause unavoidable interference with experiments in the Electrical Engineering Department in Fleming Hall. As a result, the hours of broadcasting are necessarily limited. At present, CFRC is "on air" four days a week from Thursday to Sunday; the problem of interference is the only thing preventing seven-days-a-week broadcasting.

However, within this relatively short time schedule, the programming manages to cover the musical field in its broadest sense - classics, folk, pop, jazz, and rock. Although the emphasis is on music, other programmes during the academic year include news features and interviews, sports broadcasts, news of up-coming local events, drama and comedy, and a literary programme with a special "Children's Corner."

Some programmes are as well known as Nocturne (rock music every night from 10:00 p.m.) and Classics by Request on Sunday at noon; others are as new and instantly well received as Jazz FM, each night from 10:00 p.m. till midnight.

Above all, CFRC is a student club. Its members are as varied in tastes and talents as the station's broadcasting output. New members are welcome at any time and are trained in whatever area their interests lie by more experienced members. These areas of involvement range from the technical and engineering to the programming side of things, and each member is free to put in as much time and effort as he chooses.

CFRC can be viewed from many angles - as a strictly volunteer organization with a truly professional outlook; as a provider of greatly-needed "alternative" radio for Queen's and Kingston; and as a stimulating and rewarding outlet for all those at Queen's whose interests lie in the field of radio.

Ideas: The spark we run on

Hoechst develops a constant stream of new ideas to keep its research pointed in the right directions. Ideas about what is needed, ideas about what is wanted, ideas about what is possible, ideas about what is probable in the light of a constantly changing, ever-increasing body of basic knowledge.

Imagination steers the ship

Imagination is a prime source of the new ideas Hoechst uses constantly in order to keep developing better products — more effective medicines, better chemical and industrial materials. Imagination is only half the battle, but when good ideas are properly teamed with the discipline of applied research, they constitute a formidable force in the search for improved products in every area of modern life.

Helping Build Canada

Products and ideas from Hoechst have touched and improved the quality of people's lives in every area around the world, in a hundred countries on six continents. As an affiliate of the worldwide Hoechst organizations Canadian Hoechst Limited has a full century of research and achievement to draw upon. In Canada, Hoechst is an autonomous company employing Canadians to serve Canadian needs.

Hoechst in Canada concerns itself with supplying both the present and future needs of Canadians. The range of products and services covers the spectrum through industrial chemicals, dyestuffs, plastics, printing plates, human and veterinary medicines, pharmaceuticals, and textile fibres. Hoechst techniques and know-how in these fields, combined with a large international fund of experience, have given the company a reputation for expertise which takes constant striving to live up to. ## letters to the editor

Tricolor thanks

Dear Editor

I would like to thank my fellow students at Queen's and the Tricolor Award Selection Committee for the honour they have done myself in presenting me the Tricolor Award. My feelings are a mingling of sincere pride and nostalgia, conversely coupled with regrets for those I felt worthy but who did not receive the award.

The award, I am sure, will each time I think of it or Queen's bring back memories of the good times I knew and shared with my friends and colleagues. One thing we should all remember is that Queen's is a transient collection of people who have coexisted with you, and have shared the same activities and geographical space. The buildings are merely a matrix to act within and around, and to rekindle memories of old times (as they do with alumni).

I have enjoyed the activities I have been involved in and in receiving the Tricolor award do so in recognition of the efforts people have made in activities I have organized. Golden Words, Information Bank, Engineering Society are all activities which require many dedicated people to run and I am happy that I could be a part of the team efforts that made them successful. My receiving the award should say to these people we have been successful even though the recognition comes years later.

Again thank you and best wishes.

Sincerely yours,
Kevin Van Koughnett

Frats have meaning

Dear Editor,

I feel that a response is needed in the face of the comments made by Andrew Anderson and John McQuaig in the latter's article, Better than a Frat House, which appeared in last Friday's Journal.

The comments made in the above mentioned article are typical of those people who have never come into contact with fraternities. I am a Brother of the Alpha Delta Phi Fraternity of McGill University and was actively involved in the fraternity during my two years at McGill.

Contrary to Mr. Anderson's comment's fraternities do indeed have a "real meaning" today. At larger universities a lot of students just attend classes and then go home, leading a somewhat limited life. Fraternities offer an opportunity to meet a lot of people, broaden one's horizons and form close friendships with the other brothers. Mr. Anderson said, "people presumably are no longer concerned with a person's family background" and if this is the case, then fraternities, too, are less concerned with these things as fraternities are a social institution made up of people who have changed with Mr. Anderson.

The old foundation of religious and ethnic exclusion has broken down in fraternities leaving a chance to make some very good friends and have an unspoken bond with all of the brothers, both past and present, of your fraternity. I should like to refer Mr. McQuaig and Mr. Anderson to Time Magazine, January 20, 1975 page 42 for some statistics on the growth of fraternities in the US and some of the community services they have performed.

I don't intend to convey the idea that fraternities are for everyone and every university but Mr. McQuaig and Mr. Anderson don't condemn something you know nothing about.

Sincerely yours,
Alex Darragh

Us and Vietnam

Dear Editor,

There was a ring of truth to just one sentence of the Journal article, "Canadian Defense."

"The Vietnam experience has demonstrated that a nation that believes in itself and is well-trained can frustrate the efforts of a large, more powerful state, armed with all the sophisticated paraphernalia of modern technology." This statement is precisely an argument against a well-equipped army to meet the roles assigned to the forces by the Canadian Government. One of the governments ranged against the Vietnamese in their just struggle for self-determination is our own.

A provision of the 1954 Geneva Accords was that elections to unify Vietnam were to take place within two years. In his memoirs, Eisenhower admits that if the 1956 elections had taken place, Ho Chi Minh would have won 80 percent of the vote. Canada therefore as a member blocked a protest by the International Control Commission against the refusal of Saigon government to carry out this election. Canada therefore had a hand in the establishment of the corrupt Diem regime.

The book Snow Job: Canada the United States and Vietnam by Charles Taylor, a correspondent for the Toronto Globe and Mail deserves a review in the Journal. He writes:

"I.B.J. had no cause to twist our arms: by 1965 Canada was effectively allied with the United States in its war against North Vietnam. Canadian officials were carrying American ultimatums to Hanoi, arguing American case on the ICC, furnishing American political and military intelligence and publicly supporting American policies in Southeast Asia. Canada was also selling about $300,000,000 worth of arms and ammunition to the Americans each year: a large undisclosed portion of this military hardware was being used in Vietnam. Canadian troops would have been almost superfluous."

After the 1973 ceasefire Canada was made a member of the International Commission for Control and Supervision in Vietnam. Its role was to deny alleged infiltration and at the same time ignore stepped-up repression in the South. Philip Berrigan, who is presently touring Canada on behalf of South Vietnamese political prisoners, estimates the number at 250,000. It was Canada's involvement in the ICCS that stabilized this regime. The Vietnamese frustrated the efforts of many large, more powerful states, armed with all the paraphernalia of modern warfare, including Canada. The Vietnam experience demonstrates that our military complex is a junior partner of American aggression in conflicts all over the world and therefore should be abolished.

Sincerely yours,
Roger Harper

Comment: How do you feel it to have five good size essays and five and a half exams to look forward to?

A. I don't want to take a negative attitude but my feelings towards the situation can best be described as shilly.

Someone has mentioned that comments often tend to be soporific and full of gibberish. This state of affairs does not appear to be much different than that which exists in the so-called real world Monday was St. (no longer) Patrick's day - the Irish and those who pretend need that day as an excuse for merrymaking and getting drunk. Not so us scots, were always dour, depressed, dull and drunk.

Sighting and monsters with the living islands

by Tony Davis

That well may be, but Canada can lay claim to its own sea-serpent, the Cadborosaurus. "Caddy", as he has been affectionately called, has periodically appeared off the coastline of southern British Columbia for the past sixty years.

The first recorded sighting of this mysterious creature in Canadian waters, took place in 1912, when one Mrs. Hildegaard Forbes saw a forty foot beast: "he was definitely snake-like; head raised and steady all the time he was in view... his mane seemed like seaweed." But she did not report this until some years later, apparently fearful of public ridicule. This factor has probably prevented many witnesses of such strange occurrences from telling their stories.

Again in 1933, the cadborosaurus came to fame. Major W.H. Langely, a British Columbia lawyer, told that on October 1st of that year he and his wife saw the monster.

They had been sailing between the Discovery and Chatham Islands when they heard "a very loud noise, something between a grunt and a snort accompanied by a huge hiss".

"I looked ahead in the direction of the noise, at the same time shouting to my wife and we both saw a huge object about forty feet off, a little on the port bow, and on the edge of the kelp just off the Chatham Island shore. It was only visible for a few seconds, but what both of us are absolutely agreed upon may be put down as follows: (a) It was every bit as big as the back of a large whale but entirely different in many respects and (b) its colour was a greenish brown: I should say a sort of olive green.

Sightings snowball

"It had markings along the top and sides. They seemed to be of a serrated nature. Its colour was very distinct, as the sun was shining brightly on its wetted surface, and it was such a short distance away that there could be no mistaking it. Just shortly after it went down a swirl appeared on the surface of the water ahead of the Dorothy".

Langely estimated that the creature was ninety to one hundred feet in length! This disclosure brought F. W. Kemp, an official of the British Columbia Provincial Archives, to tell his strange story.

"I was with my wife and son on Chatham

Island on the Strait of Juan de Fuca. My wife called my attention to a mysterious something coming through the channel between Strong Tide Island and Chatham Island. Imagine my astonishment on observing a huge creature with head out of the water travelling about four miles per hour against the tide. Even at that speed a considerable wash was thrown on the rocks, which gave me the impression that it was more reptile than serpent to make so much displacement.

"The channel at this point is about 500 yards wide. Swimming to the steep rocks of the island opposite, the creature shot its head from side to side, appeared to be taking its bearings. Then fold after fold of the body came to the surface. Towards the tail it appeared serrated with something more flail-like at the extreme end. The movements were like those of a crocodile. Around the head appeared a sort of mane, which drifted around the body like kelp."

Within a few weeks of Kemp's admission, the Victoria Daily Times was besieged by dozens of letters, written by those who had supposedly seen the creature. Eventually, about one hundred signed reports were recorded.

The term "cadborosaurus" originated about this time. It had been chosen by Archie Wills, the news editor of the Victoria Daily Times, who lived near Cadboro, a town close to Victoria.

The Chinook Indians of British Columbia said that Caddy had been around for centuries. They called it "Hiachuckaluck", and said that it had a mate. Perhaps there was a whole new species of undersea creatures living off the coast of British Columbia.

Again, in 1937, a Mr. and Mrs. Timeus, reported seeing Caddy, and described it as being fifty to sixty feet in length. Caddy-sighting was becoming a popular past-time. In 1946, a promoter, A. K. Martin of Vancouver, proposed that a syndicate be formed to try to catch the creature. But his means lacked rationale. A low-flying plane dragging behind a weighted net would ensnare Caddy when it surfaced. Nothing came of his proposal.

The reputed remains of a cadborosaurus were discovered near Effingham on the west coast of Vancouver Island in 1947. But the body, after much speculation, was found to be that of a basking shark. As yet, no concrete reports had been turned in - until 1950.

On February 13, 1953, a number of people saw Caddy at one time. Ten witnesses, from different positions, watched the creature swim about Qualicum Bay for about one hour. A tabulation of the witnesses' statements formed a description of a fifty foot Caddy, with a head like that of a seal, and with two or three humps on its back. Quite possibly these "humps" were the undulations of the sea-serpent.

A year later, on February 25, 1954, Nanaimo residents saw Caddy, but described it as having a horse's head. No two statements ever seemed to be alike. Basic similarities allude to the massive length of the creature, its long neck, and some form of shaggy mane.

Further sightings were reported in the following three years. In February 1957, a popular month for Caddy to appear - cold he connected with the temperature of coastal waters at that time? Caddy again witnessed by some people and descriptions were provided.

Caddy's Kiddy?

Speculation abounded: was this prehistoric monster, some unknown species of marine life, or an elaborate hoax? number and varied backgrounds of the witnesses seem to give some credit to the existence of Caddy. Certainly the expansive uninhabited British Columbia coastline account for the lack of early sightings. The desolate interior of B.C. is famous for Sasquatch or Bigfoot.

Caddy was apparently becoming a local mystery, or myth. Though in late October, 1969, Caddy was once again spotted, a photograph was taken. Headlines in the Victoria Daily Times, of October 8, read: "Caddy's kiddy" was spotted in Cadboro Bay.

Mrs. Joan Foster and Frances Foster saw the creature in Cadboro Bay on Wednesday morning. They called the police and two reporters were dispatched. One reporter was dispatched. One of the reporters, later stated:

"The creature we saw this morning was no figment of the imagination. A newsroom is convinced that our mission Caddy is a log, trail of kelp, or seal.

"Like Mrs. Foster I'm relieved to be company if I'm to join the ranks of believers.

"The creature that romped, dived, swam along this morning was about 50 feet in length, a darkish green colour and a round head that was lizard-like. When it flipped its tail completely out of the water, Caddy was too far away to take any picture, but one shot was taken at a distance of 2,000 feet off-shore. The picture de-indicate some type of humped creature moving out to sea.

Living and Loch Ness sightings

The article the following day in the Times commented on the unwillingness of witnesses to come forward and admit to having seen Caddy. Sea serpent sightings are often classed along with UFO's and other such oddities. And for this reason, the scientific community is reluctant to seriously examine the issue. Bernard Heuvelmans in On the Wake of Sea-serpents is one European zoologist who has taken it upon himself to scientifically analyze these mysterious undersea creatures.

Every "monster" that is discovered is usually simply reclassified as some unknown link of a certain marine species. Thus, many scientists are able to easily "write off" these enigmas. It is the living creatures though, that create the problems. The Loch Ness monster is the most famous and well-publicized sea-serpent. A number of photographs and underwater radar sights have been collected

But it appears that the only way to satisfy skeptics is to throw the corpse of such a creature at them. To have described something as strange as the giraffe to a European in 1900 would have brought laughter, at least until one stepped on them.

In the meantime, Caddy is still cavorting off the coast of British Columbia, albeit somewhat smaller, occasionally surfacing to make the natives restless.

By Pat Dutton

People, quite frankly, are inclined to be sceptic, are they? I thought so, and quite low, I have been one of the skeptics.

But this morning, I saw this morning's front page of the Victoria Daily Times. A startling news item convinced that our mysterious Caddy is a log, a kelp, or seal.

Like Mrs. Foster, I'm relieved to be company if I'm to join the ranks of believers.

LOOKING FOR A CHANGE?

St. Lawrence College programs in Chemical Engineering Technology and Laboratory Science Technology combine solid theoretical background with extensive practical experience to prepare you for direct entry to challenging careers in:

- i. Industry: research and development, processing, quality control, manufacturing, chemical and technical sales.
- ii. Government agencies: doing chemical, biochemical, biological, microbiological and medical research.
- iii. Education: preparing for teaching laboratories, demonstrating laboratory techniques, scientific research and continuing education.

Class size in both programs is small, facilitating a close working relationship between faculty and students.

St. Lawrence College graduates are presently employed as Chemical Analysts, Technical Representatives, Laboratory Technicians, et cetera with such companies as Inco, The Atomic Energy Commission, Alcan Research, Syncrude, and Dyeco.

Placement has been virtually 100 percent in the past with starting salaries in the range of $8,000 - $10,000.

LENGTH OF PROGRAMS: 6 semesters (three years)

ADMISSION REQUIREMENTS: An Ontario Secondary School Graduation Diploma, its acceptable academic equivalent, or mature student status.

It is recommended that students have high school level five Mathematics, Chemistry and Physics.

Advanced credits will be given to students with relevant university background.

FEE: $125 per semester
STARTING DATE: SEPTEMBER, 1975

Euphemism of the mind?

By Shelley Ledger

One of the rare moments in drama is the thrill of a perfectly honed line effortlessly entering a rapt and entrancing silence. There were plenty of these moments at the Domino Theatre Thursday night, at the opening of Paul Zindel's And Miss Reardon Drinks a Little.

In Zindel we seem to have that rarity—a playwright who can write intelligent, sensitive, entertaining plays for a wide public. With Miss Reardon, he more than confirms his reputation as the Pulitzer Prize-winning author of The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds.

Miss Reardon, is a bitterly funny and wrenchingly sad introspection of the lives-gone-wrong of three middle-aged schoolteaching sisters. The play encompasses one evening, and explores the increasingly uncomfortable world within their love-hate relationship, and their cynical desperation without. Ceil, the oldest sister, has effectively removed herself from their inbred environment through a late marriage. Apparently ill-gotten goods, the White Knight had been the property of her sister Catherine. "They kept him in the family anyway", it is pointed out. Ceil is present for dinner, a family reunion Kathleen Roberts delivers an adequately icy Ceil, though we are left unconvinced that this woman could take anything away from a fighting Catherine.

Catherine is the title character, and although she does 'drink a little', her acerbic vocabulary, with a liberal sprinkling of four-letter encouragements, flatly denies any 'euphemism of the brain', to use one of her own critical estimations. Norma Edward's Catherine chillingly awakens our fascination in a taut and desperate decay. She is a bitterly humorous and finely executed presence.

Whatever were the fossils of intention of Anna, the youngest of the three, played by Lorna Wilson, they are indeed now dead. A stinging verbal ability frequently surfaces but Anna has finally reached the nether reaches of desperation. She is, at times, quite mad. She is sensitively and maturely drawn, entirely believable, even in moments of extreme dislocation.

The secondary characters' performances are adequate, though ill-paced and unsustained. Their appearances become an anticipation of the return of Catherine and Anna to the fray, returns which are frequent.

The set has been successfully designed by Reg Bronskill in heavy browns and sombre beiges, and is well displayed under Herb Stewart's lighting. Ruth McKay's costumes again confirm her competence, and her indispensability to Domino production.

Valerie Herschfield's very capable directing has brought a fine and moving play into focus. With the assistance of some strong acting and Zindel's fierce, eccentric skill, this is one of the Domino's finest offerings of the season.

Award winning Canadian film

by Alex D. Bluze

An award winning Canadian film will be shown in Dunning Hall this Thursday. Slipstream is David Acomba's first feature film, released in 1973.

The film centres around a disc-jockey who broadcasts from a farm house in the prairies in an independent manner and style. His troubles start when his show gains popular appeal. The station manager begins to make demands upon the d.j. in an attempt to control his show, but he decides to fight for his freedom against this corporate media bullshit.

The director's love of music is a central focus of the film and the sound track features music by Van Morrison and Eric Clapton.

Slipstream was the recipient of three awards from the Canadian Film Awards in 1973, including Sound Editing and Direction. It was also bestowed with Best Fiction Film of the Year award by the awards committee. The film beat out other good films such as Don Shebib's Between Friends and Kamouraska by Claude Jutra, which aroused controversy among critics and filmmakers across Canada.

However the film has been praised for its realistic story and some stunning photography. Decide for yourself if you agree with the judges this Thursday.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO MAKE A CAREER OUT OF A SUMMER JOB.

Once upon a time there was a student who selected herself out of a summer job. 'Oh no, we're not just picking on girls. We've seen guys do it too.' She wanted to be an architect 'this kid. So she held out for a job that had something to do with architecture. None came along that year, and by the time she decided to settle for something else, it was too late. All the jobs were gone. So was her first year's tuition.

Moral: Don't hold out for the impossible dream.

Who knows Your Canada Manpower Centre might introduce you to a whole new field. Maybe you'll like your summer job so much you'll want to make a career out of it someday.

Frenzied finale

by Michael Creagen

This Thursday's screening of Frenzy will end the Film Department's Alfred Hitchcock series. Shown in conjunction with the Francois Truffaut Showcase, these series have provided the opportunity to view works by these great directors.

Hitchcock, who is currently active in cinema, and whose recent films are still more interesting than many of the younger crop of directors, is one of the few remaining old masters along with Howard Hawks and Charles Chaplin. Frenzy was released in 1972, and is definite confirmation of Hitchcock's vitality after 50 years of film making.

The film focuses upon the plight of Jon Finch who becomes the Hitchcock "wrong man", accused of a series of rape-murders which are really the work of his mate Barry Foster. Like all Hitchcock psychos, Foster's normal appearance and behaviour conceal his inward perversity, and the bonds between the two men provide the ensuing complications.

Frenzy marks Hitchcock's first use of liberal censorship, and one rape is shown in detail. But this is to define the actual terror of Finch, as Hitchcock uses this freedom discreetly through the rest of the film. With the horror thus established, the scene where Foster takes Anna Massey up to his apartment to murder her is emotionally effective and expressive without such detail. After observing the two enter his apartment, the camera tracks backwards from inside the silence of the building into the increasing din of the outside traffic. With one beautiful camera movement, Hitchcock places the horror of that moment into the presence of the everyday world, and defines the very essence of his cinema.

Frenzy was hailed as the return to greatness for Hitchcock, but these critics had underrated his 60's films like The Birds and Torn Curtain. In retrospect, Frenzy is only a continuation of these masterworks. In his characteristic quality and style.

Big band plays jazz

Two concerts featuring Queen's Jazz Ensemble are to be presented by the Music Department on Thursday, March 20 in Grant Hall, at 12:30 noon and 7:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Queen's Jazz Ensemble, directed by Duane A. Bates has played to a packed Grant Hall on its previous three appearances. The ensemble was formed only last year and was an immediate hit. There are twenty members in the full band Sharon Keates is the featured vocalist.

The program offers a wide selection of music both for the full band and for small ensembles. Included is music from the band of Woody Herman: "Fat Mama" and "Doe's Holiday" (which will feature John McEwen on trumpet) and "Spirit is Willing" featuring Peter Tomblere, trombone. Don Ellis "Concerto for trumpet" features Blaine Workman, trumpet; and "Prelude and Improvisation" by Tom Wintel is an experimental piece in polychord harmony and varying textures. Interspersed are "classical" big band selections to rock. Come early, it is a popular event.

Noh plays

Maurice Breslow - director of Phantoms

An interview with Peter Haworth

JOURNAL: Why have you chosen the name 'Phantoms' for this production of three of Yukio Mishima's one-act Noh plays? Breslow: We named it 'Phantoms' partly for practical purposes, because we wanted a title that would interest an audience. Each of the individual plays had its own title, and we needed a name that would bring them together, and one that would be an interesting and exciting title. But we didn't just grab 'Phantoms' for the sake of grabbing 'Phantoms'. The plays all concern themselves with that kind of a theme. There are phantoms in one form or another throughout the plays: memories, long-lost lovers, dead people, spirits, and certain kinds of supernatural beings or presences. So there is this whole phantom quality. In fact in one of the plays a character actually uses the word, 'I'm not a phantom anymore.'

I asked the cast to think of a decent title for the production, and one of the cast members came up with the title 'Japanese Phantoms'. I thought, well, not a bad word; maybe just 'Phantoms' would be fine. So we hit on 'Phantoms'.

JOURNAL: What is the link between these modern Noh plays and the traditional Noh play? Breslow: Well, the link here— it's not a formal link. The traditional Noh had a very formalized structure—a very codified structure in which the stage had a certain appearance for all plays. There was a set configuration to the stage, always. So physically and visually, there was a very strongly defined method for the traditional drama. These modern plays don't use that at all, in the writing, that is.

The traditional Noh play also used a great number of ghosts, people who return from the past—they had a great sense of the past, of longing, of waiting, of the spiritual workings of characters, and, as I said, of the supernatural. And that is what these plays borrow from the traditional Noh. And also what Yukio Mishima uses in them; he bases them on three traditional Noh plays, which he changes, of course.

JOURNAL: Are these plays formal like the traditional Noh plays?

Breslow: I don't think so; they are quite realistic. The plays were written in the fifties, to begin with. One is set in a hospital room. One is set in two offices which face each other in two different buildings. One is a law office; the other is a courier. And one is set in an artist's studio. So I don't think that they use the formal physical Noh structure at all.

JOURNAL: The themes then are contemporary?

Breslow: Yes, absolutely. I think the passions of love, and the phantoms, and the spirit and energy that we give off and which manifests itself in these phantoms is timeless. Not just contemporary.

JOURNAL: In your production, are the sets and costumes Japanese?

Breslow: Yes, the costumes are both Western and Japanese—just as in Japan today. You know, you can see both, with people in the same room; some have Eastern dress, others have Western dress.

The setting presents a Japanese motif. It is basically platforms with four Japanese arches which are used in different quarters. In one play, we use a Japanese screen. Just the basic simplicity of the set-in the simple lines—is in itself, I suppose, a Japanese motif.

JOURNAL: Are the passions of love and the phantoms, then, the themes that tie the plays together?

Breslow: I would say so, yes. JOURNAL: How does Mishima explain the presence of these phantoms?

Breslow: He doesn't explain them. He just admits them. I don't think he cares to explain them, because he just feels they are not only present in our lives, they are extraordinarily operative in our lives. And not to be denied. So he doesn't feel he has to apologize for them or explain them. He introduces them, and I suppose, it is up to the individual spectator, if he wants, to explain them for himself, and to try and fit them into his experience.

JOURNAL: Does your own production offer any explanations?

Breslow: No, I hope not. I think it would be dishonest. The playwright is giving us something experience as he sees it, and we are not meant to tamper with it—to try and push it in one direction or another to get one particular meaning or another. We just present it, and let the audience get what they can. Hopefully, we would present it well enough.

I don't want to tell the audience how to watch the play, and I don't want to explain what we are trying to do with the play.

I think that's what the audience is going to get as they watch the plays. I think the phantoms Mishima is talking about, the spirits, the ghosts that come back, what the year of waiting for one another do is to create a certain amount of power, a certain amount of energy which, in a sense, transcends one's physical self and becomes spiritual and takes the form of what we call a phantom.

JOURNAL: Could you tell us about the playwright, Yukio Mishima?

Breslow: He was mainly a novelist, an excellent writer, a brilliant writer. He died a few years ago. He was a very conservative man—almost reactionary, in some ways. He was evidently very unhappy about the direction that Japan was going. He took it all very seriously; he believed in the traditional ways of Japan, and it's not surprising that he should go back to the Noh plays for his drama.

He was very interested in the martial arts, and, in a sense, in general a ritualistic and rigid order of behavior. And he formed a paramilitary organization which was devoted to the martial arts and rituals and ceremonies, and to a deep code of honour which they took so seriously that they felt that he could not go on living. He felt the honourable way out was to commit suicide. In fact, he committed hari-kari in a ritualistic ceremony with two others from his group, I believe. Talk about a man living his convictions—dying for his convictions. An incredibly strong man.

JOURNAL: If he was so attached to the past, why does he make the Noh plays more Western?

Breslow: He might be concerned with tradition, but that doesn't mean he could deny history. If he is going to modernize the Noh plays, he has got to make them look like contemporary Japan. And if in Japan in the fifties people are wearing Western clothes, and smoking cigarettes, and having fashionable dress shops, and things of that sort, then he would be inaccurate and dishonest not to present that fact. Whether he likes it or not, he has got to present it.

JOURNAL: I suppose, then, it is the presence of the phantoms that is the traditional Japanese element.

Breslow: Right, well we have it in our theatre, but we always explain it first, or apologize for it, or set it up for the audience. So you make it acceptable in some way, as though we feel we have to make it acceptable. On its own terms it won't be acceptable. For the Japanese, evidently, the presence of phantoms is there.

Volleyball - the end of the road

by L.A.S.E.

Although the Senior Women's Volleyball team had officially ended their season some weeks ago in the OWIAA finals at Queen's they were offered one more chance to qualify for the Nationals. Two weekends ago they travelled to Ottawa to play in the Ottawa Valley Volleyball Association tournament which they won hands down. This past weekend, because of that previous win, they travelled to Camp Borden to compete in the Ontario Volleyball Association showdown. There were only four teams which had qualified to play in this tournament and they were: Queen's, Waterloo, The Ottawa Jets, and the Ukrainian Youth Club. Apparently the Ukrainian Youth have gone to represent Ontario in the Nationals for quite a few years now, so this was the team that everyone was out to beat.

The first team that Queen's was scheduled to play was Waterloo (whose team resembled the OWIAA semi-finalist team from Waterloo University). Queen's went in fighting and lead much of the way through the first game ending up on the winning end of the score. The second game was hard fought, however Waterloo got the best of our Gals and pulled the game out of the bag.

It was an unusual tournament in that only two games were played in a match; not the best two out of three as is usually the case.

While Queen's was playing its first two games the Ottawa Jets were dropping two to the Ukrainian Youth team. This was the team that Queen's went up against in the next round. Queen's Gals lead the Ukrainians by as much as five points all the way through both games and ended up losing both of them by collapsing as soon as they reached a double digit score. However it did go to show everyone at the tournament that the U.Y.C. were not as good as everyone had heard even though they had a player of National player status on their team. Queen's was obviously the better team—it's just too bad that it couldn't have shown up on the scoreboard.

At the same time that Queen's was playing U.Y.C. the Waterloo team was demolishing the Ottawa Jets.

In the third round there was no doubt in anybody's mind that the outcome of the Queen's - Jets game would be a double win for Queen's. And so it was. On the other court however, the great U.Y.C. was running into severe trouble as they dropped a game to Waterloo. Waterloo did not manage to win the next one though. Unfortunately because of the really weird (or non-existent) playoff schedule—Queen's, in third place, never had the opportunity to fight for a higher place in the standings. Waterloo and U.Y.C. played each other to decide who would represent Ontario at the Canadian finals. Queen's played the Jets to determine 3rd and 4th place. This did nothing for the Queen's morale and they dropped two straight to the Ottawa squad.

A nice ending to the whole affair however was the fact that Waterloo defeated U.Y.C. and so a new team will be in the finals this year.

The future looks bright for our Volleyball Gals as far as talent and ability goes, however they have a long way to go as far as team experience and maturity. Good luck to them in their final game of the year.

against the East German team. The Journal will keep Volleyball fans posted as to time and place of this exciting event.

from the sidelines RMC night

by L.A.S.E.

RMC-Queen's-St. Lawrence Night was a complete success. Unfortunately only two busloads of Queen's students went. It was not publicized due to the fact that RMC felt that they could only handle a limited number of people. The events that took place in the gym were basketball, volleyball and badminton. All of the teams that participated in all events were mixed (co-ed). Instead of acting as a restriction, or inhibitor this type of team-play seemed to be more exciting and certainly just as aggressive. The basketball was definitely of the sandlot variety and Queen's won their fair share of games. The high scorer of the Queen's team was Margie Bartlett. Apparently the Volleyball was not quite so rough and tumble but evidently everyone was having a really good time. The Queen's team turned out to be all girls and of the course the RMC team was originally all guys so they did a switch-around and both teams were made up of half and half. None of the final results were made known, however, it would be unfair to place the crown of victory on any one college because there was always a mixture of people representing every team.

Afterwards the staff of the Queen's Phys. Ed. department played the staff of St. Lawrence-RMC in a truly entertaining variety of Basketball. I believe Queen's finally emerged on the better end of the score with some fancy shooting by 'Jake' Edwards and Sue Bolton. At 11:00 everyone converged on the already active 'Mess', where RMC organizers were doing their best to teach a Queen's team and a St. Lawrence College team how to 'boat-race'. It turned out that this is a really popular sport in the Western part of Ontario and a spokesman for the RMC team stated that they were invited down to Waterloo in November for the INTRA-provincial boat-races, and the RMC team came in third with a time of 23 seconds.

On Thursday night however they did not make as fine a showing and the RMC team had a time of 32.4 seconds with the Queen's team a close second with 34.2 seconds. Before I go on I will say that boat-racing is a game involving chugging a certain beverage. There are five people on one team and it is their total times in chugging two glasses each of beer (with only a 20 percent loss) which go to make up the team time.

After the men had their chugging contest the St. Lawrence girls challenged the Queen's Phys. Ed. girls to a chugging contest. The RMC organizer tried to refuse to let this happen but finally left the room to a chorus of boos muttering, "I won't be responsible for chicks boat-racing." His girlfriend turned around and apologized for this very male-chauvinist-pig type attitude and Queen's and St. Lawrence proceeded to set up their teams for the big boatrace anyway.

The Queen's team won with a time of 23 seconds, however they were only chugging one glass each.

After this gala affair in which most people involved, as well as spectators, were drenched in beer there was dancing and general drinking for everyone.

The only other incident of note during the night was when a certain friend of mine went up to the bar with her leather Phys. Ed. jacket on and asked for a drink to which the bartender (after a very long stare) replied, "We don't serve ladies here." Pointing to the special button in her lapel she replied "Why Not?" at which time the other bartender came over and said that if she didn't get out of the bar area immediately they would close the whole thing down. My friend, not being a militant, left...without a drink.

It strikes me funny that RMC is run, its rules enforced by the same government that is presently promoting International Women's year...however maybe RMC should be looked upon as a relic.

All in all it was a very fun time and I don't know anybody that did not enjoy themselves thoroughly. A challenge from RMC received recently indicates that perhaps Queen's should get together a few teams and practise up on this boat-racing sport for next year.

etrication: Why bother?

by Gerald Hodge

Mr. Hodge is director of the School of Urban and Regional Planning at Queen's University. Reprinted from Globe and Mail, March 14, 1975.

In the sixties you were given to understand that when you passed 30 you were over the hill. In this metrication decade, the cataclysmic year has reached right down to the pre-adolescents.

One Montreal educator thinks that anyone beyond Grade 5 (10 years old) will never fully adjust to the metric system.

You're probably not much awed by this prospect. This may mean that the Canadian Metric Commission has already got you to think metric. Or it may indicate a certain resignation to the thrust of events; the Metric Commission seems to have convinced a lot of businessmen, newspapers, labour unions, etc., to say "it's inevitable".

Or it could be simple, old apathy and, in that case maybe there is still some hope that this momentous step won't be taken in such a sheeplike way by Canadians.

Have you ever wondered, as I have, why this country is involved in such a spacious exercise? Who benefits from metrication? Who pays? Are the advantages as substantial as the claims for the metric system suggest?

There are three general areas in which we are being led to expect extensive payoffs by converting Canada to the metric system of measurement. These are (1) manufactured goods sold in world export markets, (2) the learning capabilities of people, and (3) simplicity and convenience in packaging, purchasing and quality-control. Let's examine each of these areas and test the validity of the claims.

(1) World export markets will be thrown wide open to our manufacturers if we become a metric country. "It has been estimated," the reports always seem to say, "that Canada loses between $100 million and $200 million in foreign trade a year" because it has not yet converted. The Metric Commission confidently reports that exports should increase up to 10 per cent. This is mere pie-in-the-sky. Consider two aspects of this matter.

First, world markets are not just jostling there waiting for us to exploit them by making sure our screws fit and our sizes are the same. A lot of pretty efficient firms in other countries know these sources of wealth too.

Second, world trade is a two-way business. Once the Canadian scene is metricated, it will be an easy matter for foreign firms producing for the metric world to expand production and export to us. That old imperial system of feet, inches, gallons and quarts, it seems, acts somewhat as a "tariff barrier" in favour of our firms.

Look around you at all the products made in metricated countries such as Japan, Italy, Sweden and Czechoslovakia. They may be made to metric scale such as your toaster, your Toyota, or your transistor and you never really gave it a thought, or had to. When was the last time you had a problem getting a French bicycle, an Italian auto, or a Japanese hairdryer fixed because it was a metricated unit?

You may have had trouble for lots of other reasons, but not likely for the measurement scale it was designed in. And much the same applies to the Spaniard driving a British car or the Swede using a U.S. computer.

It is one of the wonders of our modern industrial world that this vast interchange of goods goes on somewhat oblivious to the differences in measurement scales. And, even if it once made a difference, the global corporations now have made these problems decidedly secondary to themselves and almost inconsequential to us. Manufacturing firms can, and do, adapt to these differences easily, so why change a whole country?

(2) People will learn more easily using metric scales rather than our crude and disparate feet, pounds and gallons. Two observations can also be made here.

First, there is neither any evidence that Dutch, Swiss or Russian educators have easier going in their arithmetic classrooms, nor that children of their countries show any special prowess as a result of having metrics from day one.

Second, if metrics are so easy, then why do so many of our children experience difficulty learning about dollars and cents?

You've probably heard or seen the typical argument, like the one published in The Globe and Mail last fall:

"How many feet in a mile?" the metric official asked.

"Ah, 5,280?" the man replied.

"OK, but how many feet in seven miles?" the official prodded (with a glint in his eye, no doubt).

When was the last time you wanted to know? And when was the last time a Frenchman needed to know how many metres in seven kilometres? (7,000, easy isn't it?). Oh, yes, and fractions are cited as dinosaurs of our system by the metricationists. And 1/4s and 1/5s do work very well in the metric system, but 1/3 of a metre is still a repeating decimal.

As long as the properties being measured are physical attributes like weight, volume or distance, metrics are great and the problems with fractions minimal. But you still have decimals which, while neater, are not much gain for most people.

(3) Increased simplicity in packaging and purchasing has been promised by the metricationists among us. Some retailers have already begun to dispute this. Men's dress shirts have had collar sizes measured traditionally in intervals of one-half inch. Now a centimetre is almost, but not quite, this big, so the number of collar sizes offered would have to increase from eight to eleven.

Would I find a 39-centimetre collar too small and a 40-centimetre collar too large in comparison to my standard 15 1/2 inch? Add in the matter of sleeve lengths and a store might have to carry 33 different collar-sleeve combinations instead of the present 24.

And how many more dill pickles will you get out of a 68-litre bottle than out of a 24-ounce bottle? The answer is as it has always been: as many dills as the manufacturer wants to give you.

You see, these kinds of products are not going to change; the plethora of packaging sizes and types are not going to be reduced, and the advertising gimmicks are not going to cease.

Even the wine I buy from metricated countries does not come in uniform quantities. It seems to vary in "standard" bottles by as much as 70 milliliters between my favourite Portuguese and French. If those fellows can't get together on a standard metric wine bottle, why should we expect a consensus among our food-processors, for example?

At this point, if not much sooner, I expect the metricationists to protest that we needn't perpetuate the profusion of sizes. This is the time to reconsider our standard sizes. For example, make the "pound" of butter .50 kilograms instead of the .45 kilograms it translates into directly.

You can be certain the extra 50 grams will cost you more; and will it still fit in your butter dish? That's a minor annoyance.

What if we decide to go all the way with what's known as "hard conversion" and rationalize building materials sizes? A normal 4 x 8-foot sheet of panelling could become 1 x 2 metres, I suppose, and you'd have a bit of space to fill in. Of course, our lumber firms will make everything match up just as they do now.

Unquestionably, we have the capability as individuals and firms to make the changeover. But, why? There are, seemingly, few gains to be had and there will be a lot of costs to bear. The program laid on by the Canadian Metrication Commission is going to cost millions. Retailers and wholesalers will have the burden of maintaining inventories of parts for many devices in both metric and avoirdupois units for a long time. There will be significant costs in labelling, packaging and training programs.

The Ontario Ministry of Education is already budgeting for special grants to school boards to cover the extra expenditures for changing textbooks and other learning materials. Many items of equipment in schools and elsewhere will become obsolete with the changeover, like your thermometer. This is pure and simple waste.

And it may be pure and simple rhetoric to ask just what contribution metrication will make to problems of poverty, famine, economic disparity, environmental pollution and urban deterioration? The answer is nothing and while we are occupied with this latest novelty of industrial society we shall lose some momentum in trying to solve them.

It's as if we're trying to contrive a way of experiencing "future shock" to prove Alvin Toffler correct.

The historian, Roderick Seidenberg, would probably contend that metrication is part of industrial man's seeming design to organize, integrate and co-ordinate social aspects of life commensurate with the machines he has perfected.

That's the "heavy" side to it. But the Canadian Meteorological Service won't be fooling when you hear this sort of weather report on April 1 of this year: "... there will be a high today of 15, winds will be from the south-west at 32, and the barometer is steady at 75.2."

Since this is a Why Not? year, I expect there will be people who put the metrication issue in those terms. There are, however, fundamental inequalities at issue in regard to women in our society. No such lofty ideals exist for metrication. It's mundane; it's costly.

Why bother?

Maione:

Peasants march forward again

by Nancy Flood

"Unless we know the world of the peasants, we don't really know our own history and unless we know our own history, we can't help make the future."

Thus Romeo Maione, began his talk on Patterns in World Development, held Wednesday night in Dunning Auditorium. Presently serving as Director of the Non-Governmental Organization Division of the International Development Agency, Maione has seen much experience in the realm of international relations in various posts within both the Catholic Church and the Canadian government.

Taking an historical approach to the question of just what are the patterns in world development today, Maione spoke of the "spark of hope" that lies in the hearts of all peasants. While in his grandfather's era 90-95 per cent of the world's population had been peasants Maione claimed that now only 70-75 per cent existed in that state.

Peasant life had been one of babies, of work, of complete dependence on the peasant culture for both happiness and security in sickness and old age. Having little communication with the outside world, existence had gone on like this until the thoughts of men like Karl Marx and the scientific advances of Louis Pasteur and others hit the scene.

More children lived, the world became crowded, and class tensions developed. The tremendous thrust of immigrants to the cities and across the oceans to the New World carried millions with it in the drive to find promised success.

Yet this breaking away caused problems too. The aspiration to become better unleashed a tremendous sense of greed based on insecurity. Whereas before the peasant community had cared for its sick, shared with its hungry and buried its dead, now the absence of this brotherhood left a great void in the lives of those who had escaped it. Their only security became their bank account and their worldly possessions became a way of demonstrating their imagined safety.

Thus, Maione sees in this pattern of human development a trend toward alienation of people from each other which has resulted in a misdirection of science and technology. While these could and should be the "great liberators" of man, often they have been degraded to the position of servants to his ego.

This same thrust of peasants who have suddenly glimpsed a better world, is being repeated today in Africa and Latin America, Maione claims. There, the population has been growing unabated just as in Europe in the early stages of our modernization. Thus, it will not taper off until those in Africa and other Third World regions achieve the same level of scientific knowledge and security we have now. If we want to stabilize the population, we must raise the economy of these countries enough that the average farmer can buy a tractor and doesn't have to produce 5 sons to till his fields.

Our development aid programs then, Maione stresses, must be directed toward the ordinary man. We can supply aid and should as our wealth is a product of the labour of someone such as a coffee picker in Latin America. The picker is unavoidably the first link in a long chain of Canadian factory workers, and administrators, truckdrivers and loaders, grocery store owners and clerks who put the finished jar of coffee on our shelves.

Our service to developing countries should reflect the realities of the world in which we live. It should acknowledge the fact that this rich, poor, developed under-developed split in the world cannot last. We delude ourselves if we teach new generations that a world built like this one can survive in peace, Maione stresses.

"What we are living is the challenge of bringing people together so that we can share knowledge to build a community", Maione declares. The challenge is open to all and does not so much ask us to "love", as to "grow".

Growth, he defines as the receiving of truth from people we know. We must lose the arrogance of being rich and get to know the people of the third world countries. As we teach them, so they can teach us to rediscover ourselves and to find out where our own development pathway went wrong, Maione declares. "Only when we go to the victims of society can we realize that we ourselves are the victims."

Just as a human being is complex, so the social systems of the world are complex and so must any solutions to development aid be complicated. Maione is hopeful and retains a faith in human ability. We cannot, he says, go backwards, but in continuing onwards we must take care to learn from those who have not yet made our mistakes. In helping them we must help ourselves to a better understanding of where we have been and where we have the potential to go.

Athletics budget up 6.3%, 3 women's teams cut

by Barbara McDermott

Tuesday March 11 was the date of the latest University Council of Athletics meeting. At this time it was decided that each of the five subcommittees: Women's Intramural Athletics, Recreation Services, Women's Intercollegiate Athletics, and Men's Intercollegiate Athletics were to accept budget increases of 6.3 per cent for the next year, the 1975-76 season.

As a result of having to operate on $4,235 less than is necessary for the Women's Intercollegiate Program, the decision has been made to cut the intermediate teams of Volleyball, Basketball and Field Hockey.

All committees were forced to make revisions in their proposed budgets to conform to this decision. Women's Intramurals and Recreation Services had no problems remaining within the 6.3 per cent increase limit.

Men's Intramurals, Women's Intercollegiate and Men's Intercollegiate will all receive less money than requested, according to proposed budgets. The Women's Intercollegiate Program in particular has been very hard hit by the budget restriction.

The men's Intercollegiate Program must function next year on $400 less than it requested; Bews must function on $720 less than requested, and the Women's Intercollegiate Program on $4,235 less than requested.

U.C.A. budget restrictions mean that 49 athletes who completed this year will not be able to compete in intercollegiate athletics next year.

'C'... THERE'S MORE TO A DIAMOND THAN DAZZLE

True diamond quality is determined by four factors. CARAT weight... which denotes size and not the quality of the diamond. CUT... brings out the fire and sparkle. COLOR... captures the spectrum of the rainbow. And CLARITY. We'll be happy to explain all these factors... come 'C' for yourself.

Role of the university

The Ontario Cabinet will be holding a special meeting in Kingston on April 16, and has invited all groups and organizations to present briefs at the meeting. In light of this, the AMS External Affairs Commission set up a task force of Queen's students to draw up a paper for presentation to the Cabinet. The following article reflects what was discussed at the second meeting of the task force, held Sunday Mar. 16. The article was prepared by External Affairs Commissioner Peter Lane.

The university is a unique type of post-secondary educational institution with characteristics that distinguish it from a community college, a trade school and any other institution. The first of these qualities is that the university engenders in its members the ability to ask questions, based on established knowledge and evidence, and to seek answers to these questions. In other words, the university encourages both students and faculty to think critically and analytically, the thinking being placed on the thinking process itself rather than on the particular questions and answers involved.

There are two essential characteristics of the university: the transmission of existing knowledge and the facilitation of the creative use of this knowledge. To ignore one component in favour of the other leads to an overall failure of the university to meet its objectives and this applies both at the level of the individual discipline and at the level of the university as a whole. An excessive emphasis on the acquisition of factual knowledge in any discipline can lead to rote-learning and stifled creativity. Similarly, it is essential to the institution that a balance be struck between disciplines which emphasize the application of knowledge and skills and those which focus more on the theoretical and the aesthetic - a balance between professional schools and those which provide a liberal education - in order that the very necessary cross-fertilization between the two can occur. The importance of this duality cannot be over-emphasized, and the pressures to make the university more responsive to society's need for skilled technicians must be resisted; the university and its graduates are the cerebrum of the societal animal, not its arms and legs.

The second essential characteristic of the university is the discovery and the development of new and existing knowledge for the enrichment of the society as a whole. While it is not claimed that the university is the sole source of new knowledge, it does represent the major institutional milieu in our society in which scholars can come together for the purposes of unbiased research, theory formulation and artistic endeavour.

It is obvious that there are no statistical parameters which can be examined to provide hard data on the output of the university in this area. As such, discovery and development of new knowledge is seldom taken into account in an analysis of the operation of a university. Yet it is this coming together of scholars, this discovery and development of knowledge which is essential to the integrity of the university, and to the society as a whole.

The third function of the university is to develop in its members the ability to make rational, moral judgments, critical and analytical thinking, and the discovery of new knowledge is meaningless unless decisions about the merits and implications of various conclusions are made wisely and judiciously. Since judgment, by definition, incorporates both reason and intuition, this is in many ways the most difficult yet essential function of the university. Judgment cannot be read in books, seen on a television screen nor heard in a lecture theatre, yet the university must demand that its members learn to exercise sound judgment. This is certainly the most problematic of the university's functions, and one that can never be costed out, it is the society more than the university which reaps the benefits of sound judgment.

In the preceding discussion, we have examined some of the distinguishing characteristics of the university, but the awesome task of assessing its value to the society lies ahead. In an institution as complex as the university, the simple principles of systems analysis cannot be applied. The very nature of the system and its elements, as outlined above, implies that its output is multi-dimensional, and cannot be subjected to simplistic input-output-cost-benefit analysis.

The contribution of the university to the society cannot be measured as a function of diplomas - per annum, publications per department nor any other readily quantifiable measure. Rather the value of the university is best reflected in the society's capabilities for self-criticism, self-analysis and the resulting progress and development of the society and the culture.

Education in general, and the university in particular can be seen to be the most effective tools that society has at its disposal for self-betterment. Without scholars and the products of the labours, a modern society cannot maintain its cultural standards nor its present quality of life, let alone critically analyse its strengths and weaknesses and suggest new directions. Indeed, in the bewildering complexity of our post-industrial society it is more and more apparent that we have not been diligent enough in self-analysis and self-criticism. It is the lot of the scholar in society to lead and direct this very necessary process of self-evaluation.

The metaphor of the ivory tower is often applied to the university in a derogatory sense to signify a lack of concern for and contact with society in which it exists. Yet the image of a tower is the most appropriate one to describe the university - a tower which is anchored in the bedrock of society, yet from which the occupants can obtain a far-reaching and objective overview of the whole society. It is precisely this perspective that the university requires in order that it may critically and constructively analyse the society, ask the questions and seek to provide the answers, in order to better the whole society. It is precisely this perspective which is sacrificed when the university is "taken down a knotch or two" and is subjected to temporary and parochial environmental contingencies.

Response to this article is requested from all readers. Comments and suggestions are also invited on issues such as OSAP, tuition, housing, financial constraints and other student-related matters; the task force will consider each of these, this week. Comments should be addressed to Peter Lane, AMS Office, Students' Memorial Union, Queen's; or directed to members of the task force: Sue Harper, Bruce Trotter, John Gray, Sue Wishart, John Wilson and Sarah Yarnell.

Housing rip-off

Dear Editor

By means of prefacing this "letter", let me tell you it deals with a matter only too familiar to many students - the housing rip-off.

Presently I am living in a six-man house on University Avenue, our landlord being a Queen's professor in the Geology Dept. Being naive as to the ways of Kingston landlords, and assuming one associated with Queen's couldn't be all that bad. We signed a month by month tenancy agreement rather than a yearly lease. Things ran smoothly until around 5:00 pm Friday, January 31, when we from our landlords lawyer, a courier-delivered letter containing a month's notice of a rental increase of $100 per month, and instructing us that future rental payments were to be handled through his lawyers office. Whereas we had heretofore dealt personally with our landlord, we were to say the least, mildly surprised.

That none of the subtleties of the situation escape you let me point out that we received the bare minimum notice as required by law, putting the onus on us to either give in return a month's notice of our intent to move out that same day, or accept the increase. Needless to say matters, it being the middle of winter, dictated our grudging acceptance of the increase - an increase by no means justified as we pay all our own utilities.

The case takes on an even further twist when it was found that this self-same professor is himself living in a house rented from the university, paying substantially less than half our rental.

Inquiries made on our behalf by the AMS president, the Rector, and legal aid among others as to the propriety of the situation received several startling replies. The drift of these replies was expressed by John Richardson to the Rector: "it was the policy to rent to staff when he became housing director, and he has subsequently not seen fit to change that policy."

Intentionally I have refrained from mentioning the name of the professor as I have no wish to conduct a vendetta. What I do wish is to make several points concerning the housing issue.

Why does Queen's, owning roughly 100 houses, only make about a quarter of their dwellings available to students? I don't begrudge the university making housing available to technicians and visiting lecturers, but why rent to professors, who can quite reasonably afford to pay going city rates? Either they should make this housing available to students in this time of housing shortage, or they should charge these people the marketable rent for someone of that income bracket, especially now that Queen's is in such tight financial straits.

The only reasonable argument presented for this policy or lack of it, is that it provides an incentive to attract highly trained staff while casting no dispersions on the quality of this university. I say that a respected institution of higher learning shouldn't have to buy staff - it should attract them by its reputation!

In closing, let me clarify the intent of this letter. I would it would provide some impetus for Queen's to turn considerably more attention to the student housing situation in Kingston, perhaps allowing themselves the freedom of turning substantially more houses over to the AMS for the use of students.

Let me iterate, this is by means an isolated case, I think the situation is such as to call for the formation of an all-student organization to blunt the power of the slum landlords, even if it means financing housing itself.

Perhaps too patiently

Yours,

Steve Friday

Lean to the left

Sinistrals of the world unite

by Tony Davis

One of the most maligned and persecuted minorities in the history of mankind has been the left-handed one, the "south-paw".

The hand preference of "primitive" man can be ascertained by analyzing their work habits. Many cave-drawings and arrowheads were found to have been created by left-handers. In particular, one third of primitive artworks discovered in North America have been attributed to the southpaws.

Many ancient societies favoured the left hand: the Incas, Australian aborigines, Pygmies and a number of others. But, as yet, left-handers were still in a minority. And, as soon as man adapted to his environment, he desired some form of uniformity. Sameness and a sense of harmony have always appealed to man's sense of precision.

Since the majority of populations were dextrally-oriented, the left-handers would have been seen as different and perhaps alien.

"Bronze Age" implements were notably produced by right-handers. The dominance of the dextrals was ensured by sheer numbers. The term dextral comes from the Latin word, "dexter", meaning "right, handy, skilful, favourable". The equivalent for the left is "sinister", described as "left, perverse, unfavourable". Such are the value judgements that have been attached to the word "sinister". With the predominance of the dextrals, social convention demanded right-handedness. Artisans would certainly not waste their time making tools for a minority of the population. Roman augury and other processes of divination dealt with notions of "good" and "bad" fortune. And those ideas became associated with the left and right hands.

The Romans perceived of the left hand as being lucky. The Greeks in divination practices viewed the left as unlucky.

In Egypt, the concept of the left was associated with the setting of the sun. And the left and right hands took on aspects of life and death. The right hand represented the Underworld god, Set, symbolizing death and darkness. The left hand was dedicated to Horus - the symbol of the setting sun, indicating life and light. One derivation of Egyptian mythology was that of the eastern warrior god, Mithras with its connotations of life and light in opposition to death and darkness. Mithras was always associated with the left hand.

In respect to early pantheistic religions, the left was considered to be an attribute of the supernatural, something unknown, and therefore dangerous to meddle with. The Buddhist principle of the Yin and Yang again brought "handedness" into religious beliefs. The Yang was active, male, representing life, light and the right hand. In contrast, the Yin was passive and female, and represented the earth, darkness, and the left hand. The union of these two principles formed the ultimate truth (the Tao), composing a circle.

Circumambulation represents one feature of left-handedness. To walk in one direction to another was often seen to affect the supernatural. Judo and his men marched around the walls of Jerusalem from the left to the right in order to bring God's wrath down upon the city. Devil-worshippers, summoning spirits, would draw a magical circle from the left to right; anti-clockwise.

The devil, Satan, is given the attribute of being left-handed. The "Evil Eye" is often pictured as a left eye. Witches were said to have carried a "devil's mark" on some part of their body to sign their pact with Satan. In the mid-seventeenth century, the infamous witch hunter, Doctor Murnie, arrested a Scottish witch, Isobel Crawford, discovered: "...the devil's mark, quibb was on one braid dyn spott, in the inner syde of her right thie..."

Perhaps much of the immediately obvious ignorance concerning the left hand comes from Christian religion, in particular, through the medium of the Bible and through its ritualism. The New Testament, revelations dealing with the coming of the Messiah include references to the left hand:

"When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then he shall sit upon the throne of his glory."

"And before him shall be gathered all nations, and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth sheep from the goats."

"Then shall the King say unto him on his right hand, 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.'"

"Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels: there shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous unto life eternal.' (Matthew 25:31-46)

The analogies within these passages, by many of the superstitious concerned with the left hand, are said to be the sheep, and the goats are turned away. In Medieval magical practices, the goat was used to symbolize Satan, the goat also being a representation of fertility.

To a great extent, Christian ritual is based upon dextrality. The Communion, in both Catholic and Protestant services, involves carrying the sacramental wine and bread from the altar by the priest to the right. Those who receive the sacrament have it administered to them from the left to the right. The water is received with the right hand upon the left, asserting dominance. The right hand of the recipient handles the chalice. The sign of the cross is made with the right hand. In portraits of Christ, his right hand is often seen in blessing, with the first two fingers up-raised. To give the blessing with the left hand was considered blasphemous and such was done in the Black Mass of the meretics.

"The celebrant then takes the thurible and proceeds to incense the altar and the gifts. First he incenses the chalice and wafer with three counterclockwise strokes, after which he makes a profound bow." (La Vey, The Satanic Rituals.)

In the act of confirmation, the "laying on of hands" is predominated by the right. According to superstition, the child confirmed with the left hand will have an unlucky life. In the Christian marriage service, the bride stands to the left of the groom, and has the wedding ring placed on the third finger of her left hand - the belief existing that that finger has a particular relation to the heart. Part of the argument associated with female inferiority was that woman was formed from one of Adam's left ribs!

Aside from Christian rituals, much of the basis for sinister mythology was detailed in the books of Psalms in the Bible. A few references will suffice to exhibit these dextral leanings: "at thy right hand there was pleasures for everyone" (Psalm 16); "Thy righthand hath holden me up" (Psalm 18); "the saving strength of His right hand" (Psalm 20); "the right hand of the Lord is exalted" (Psalm 118); "The Lord is thy keeper; the Lord is thy shield upon thy right hand" (Psalm 121).

The list is endless. The Christian religion has thus, through its rituals, and adaptations of earlier belief systems, condemned the "left". People derisively speak of leftist politicians, alluding to radicalism. Superstitions have thus been able to manifest themselves into man's rationale; but there is nothing rational in assuming the left to be "evil" or "weird".

Child psychologists have pointed out that, to some extent, the forcing of a child to write with right hand, and not with its left, has caused stuttering. The American Science Digest in April, 1960, stated that there were an estimated 200 million sinistrals, a sizable minority indeed. The question of "handedness" evolves in early childhood and is determined by a number of factors, including natural preference. The seeming disinterest of society to accommodate sinistrals illustrates this. Many university lecture theatres for example have left-handed desks only along the sides of the classrooms, but principally for decorative uniformity. In any case, the number of left-handed desks is often disproportionate to the number of sinistrals at any single university.

It has not been until recent times that some of the innate prejudices towards left-handed people have been exposed and subjected to ridicule. Now stores supply tools for left-handers. Scissors, can openers and many other utensils can be more easily manipulated by left-handers.

The term "southpaw" is used for describing left-handed individuals particularly in sports. Though it is not necessarily a term of ridicule, it does indicate a uniqueness a difference from the norm. The southpaw was originally acknowledged in the boxing world, although few have won world titles. Tennis is one sport peppered with left-handers, Rod Leaver being one of the most famous southpaws.

Naturally, there are many renowned sinistrals Babe Ruth, Paul McCartney, Kim Novak and Leonardo da Vinci are some of the most famous. McCartney has described some of the problems he had to deal with as a sinistral child:

"When I was a kid, I seemed to do everything back to front. I used to write backwards, and every time the masters of my school looked at my book, they used to throw little fits."

"I had difficulties outside school too. I couldn't learn to ride a bike because I would insist on pedalling backwards and was quite convinced that mine was the right way and everybody else was wrong. I do everything with my left hand and no matter how hard I try I can't alter the habit. A doctor once told me I shouldn't try, because left-handedness is something to do with the brain."

Source materials on this irregular topic are varied and sketchy, but among the more notable are the works of Blair, Barsley, Wile and Parson. Within this assorted composition it is hoped that the plight of the left-hander will be recognized and that the causes for this situation are fully exposed.

Perhaps it is time to raise a clenched left fist, for sinistrals are a neglected and misrepresented minority and shout "power to the people".

Early music: unusual concert

On Sunday, March 23, following Evensong at 7:00 p.m. The Collegium Musicum of Queen's University will give a concert of late Renaissance vocal music at St. George's Cathedral. (The program is the one given in Grant Hall on Mar. 15). This performing group was organized four years ago by Dr. Wilbur Maust of Queen's Music Department in order to present vocal and instrumental music of the Middle Ages, Renaissance, and early Baroque era. Each of the two yearly concerts given by this ensemble is devoted to one or two themes or style periods. The Music Department has a collection of about two dozen "early" instruments (all reconstructions after early models) which are frequently used in performances in order to present, whenever possible, historically plausible performances.

Since its first concert in 1971, the Collegium has given at least two concerts in Kingston each year and the group has also travelled to New York State and to Toronto to give concerts. For the Sunday night concert the Collegium will sing in St. George's Cathedral for the second time. Almost exactly four years ago the group presented an Easter Sunday liturgical drama, The Visit to the Sepulchre, on Easter Sunday following Evensong at the invitation of the late Dr. George Maybee.

The Sunday night program is the first to be given entirely by the vocal ensemble without any instrumental participation. All but one composition on the program was written within several decades of 1600. Although "a cappella" performance is not the only historically appropriate manner of performing this music it is certainly a possible and an effective one. The entire program given by this eighteen-voice ensemble will be presented in this manner. The program includes psalms, motets, and mass movements by leading composers of the late Renaissance - Byrd, Victoria, Lasso, Palestrina, and Sweelinck. The second half of the recital demonstrates contrasting styles of secular music from the highly emotionally charged madrigals of Monteverdi and Gesualdo to the simpler and more playful secular works of Lasso, Isaac, and Hassler. The public is cordially invited to attend this admission-free concert.

Modern music: an experiment

Two concerts are scheduled by the Music Department to take place in Grant Hall this coming week. On Tuesday, March 25, Queen's Choral Ensemble will give a program of choral music, and on Wednesday, March 26, Queen's Wind Ensemble will be heard in concert. Both are admission free and both commence at 8:30 p.m.

Queen's Choral Ensemble is under the direction of Denise Narcisse-Mair and their program will include Kenneth Leighton's "Let all the world in every corner sing"; Healey Willan's "Coronation Suite," and a first performance in Canada of John Rutter's "The Falcon." For this work, the 100-member Choral Ensemble will be augmented by a semi-chorus of the Boys of St. George's Cathedral Choir.

The Choral Ensemble has travelled out-of-town several times in response to invitations received by them to sing in concert. Just before Christmas they sang in St. Mary's Cathedral the first part of Handel's "Messiah" for which performance they received a standing ovation from the more than two thousand audience.

Definitely not a concert to miss, nor is the second event on Wednesday evening when the Queen's Wind Ensemble, under their director Duane A. Bates will perform a varied program mainly consisting of music written originally for winds and percussion. This program includes works by Aaron Copland, Anton Dvorak, Khachaturian (Three Dance Episodes from the exciting Spartacus Ballet), John Barnes Chance (which features percussion) and Robert Washburn.

What is thought to be a first performance in Kingston of Stravinsky's "Octet for Wind Instruments" will feature Cynthia Lalli, flute; David C. M. Smith, clarinet; Barbara Keane and Kevin Bailey, bassoon; Blaine Workman and John Palmer, trumpet; and Maria Cooper and Stewart Cruikshank, trombone. This Octet is one of the finest examples of Stravinsky's neo-classical works - a style of tonal writing with complex rhythmic figures, usually consisting of the setting up of a regular meter and then deliberately destroying that meter with another. This style forms the basis of most serious non-serial composition during the 1920's, 30's, and 40's. Of this Octet Stravinsky wrote "The Octet Began With A Dream. I found myself (in my dream state) in a small room surrounded by a small number of instrumentalists who were playing some very agreeable music. I did not recognize the music they played and I could not remember any of it the next day, but I do remember my curiosity - in the dream - to know how many musicians there were. I remember too, that after I had counted them to the number eight, I looked again and saw that they were playing bassoons, trombones, trumpets, flute and clarinet. I awoke from this dream concert in a state of delight and the next morning I began to compose the Octet..."

The Wind Ensemble basically consists of single players on each part, rather than the massed sections one would find in a concert band. This is the 6th year of operation of the Ensemble which is formed by audition among students and faculty of Queen's University.

Unprecedented temerity

Physical Graffiti Led Zeppelin

by Paul Luke

No other group than Led Zeppelin could have the temerity to release an album like this. It is assured, ambitious and not infrequently atrocious. The machismo stance is a little less aggressive than of yore but the male hormone essential to the group's music is still present in sufficient quantities in things such as "The Wanton Song" to evoke visions of Robert Plant's tanned and writhing pectorals. Physical Graffiti lacks the rage and frenetic pace of some of the group's best previous work but Page's production has improved to the point where even some of the most dismal material attains assemblance of mere mediocrity under his touch.

Sides one and two house the token turkeys which have been present on the majority of the band's albums. The lumbering fossil called "In My Time of Dying" proves that when it really tries Led Zeppelin is absolutely without peers in the genre of self-parody while another pulverized trifle, "Houses of the Holy," might best be listened to while breathing deeply from a plastic bag full of Ledpage's Airplane glue. Nonetheless, "Trampled Under Foot" is a fine number which intensifies a guitar-clavinet based Stevie Wonder attack without brutalizing it. "Kashmir" is the peak of the album. This song is a triumph of production which pits near-east mellotron noodlings against an incantatory guitar hook which builds to and sustains a plateau of energy and textural complexity. "In the Light" begins side three and features a eerie introduction which aspires to a kind of wasted bag-pipe sound and then plunges abruptly into a trademark Zeppelin riff. Among the remainder of the songs which flesh out sides three and four are a tasty Page instrumental, an acoustic blues piece and three more heavy-metal pounders, the weakest one of which "Sick Again!" the album limps out on. The record's most noteworthy achievement is its integration of John Paul Jones' keyboards on a nearly full time basis into a sound which still remains recognizably Led Zeppelin's, although Plant's shrill vocals are less prominent, indeed often buried in the mix and Page's guitar work now has more melody than bite Physical Graffiti, is short on something ineffable, maybe it's decent lyrics, but it is electric and is a high-water mark of the group's artistry. What's more remarkable is that Jimmy Page retains even the tempered nastiness that he has, considering that he reached his personal high point in playing on the Kinks' "You Really Got Me" back in 1964.

Why destroy the mystery?

There are Giants in the Earth
by Michael Grumley

by Tony Davis

This book is plugged on the dust-jacket as 'an evolutionary and legendary history of the Yeti, Mono Grande, and Sasquatch; three strains of humanoid giants alive today.' Though relatively uncritical of his sources, the author has provided a remarkable plethora of legends, facts, and fantasies for the reader to dwell upon.

The title of the book comes from Genesis 6: "There were giants on the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of renown."

Not that Grumley bases the disputed existence of these creatures upon Biblical quotations, but it is interesting to note the widespread mythologies of man which make references to strange giant beings. These man-apes, or "missing links", are certainly not unique to the Himalayas with its Yeti or the north coast of North America with its Sasquatch or Bigfoot. South America and Asia also boast of these monsters.

Within the book are the usual numbers of photographs of reputed casts of the footprints of the Yeti and its kin. Aside from hair and fecal waste, the casts are the only tangible evidence of their existence. Included is the photograph of the dead five foot ape taken in Venezuela by de Loys in 1922. Such beasts are not supposed to be in South America. The validity of this particular enigma is discussed in Bernard Heuvalman's On the Track of Unknown Animals.

The Bluff Creek California film of a Sasquatch, taken in 1962 by Roger Patterson, is also discussed. As of the present-day consensus, American experts to Russian ones state the beast in the film to be real. Canadian naturalists in Ottawa have called the film a fake.

In any case, There are Giants in the Earth is decidedly a fascinating book, though not as rich in detail and evidence as it could be. For more interested enthusiasts Sanderson's Abominable Snowman: Legend Came to Life and the recent Bigfoot will provide a better analysis of the problem.

As the matter rests now, it would be better if these creatures remain unbound, because the discovery could never match the mystery.

Journal Sports writer

Introduction

Bews '74-'75 has to be classified as being very successful. The Convenor system introduced by Sue Bolton has proved to be the stimulus that has raised the calibre of the program. The men who volunteered their time to supervise a sport have shown that hard work and play can go hand in hand in rebuilding a Queen's tradition to its highest level of achievement. Each faculty and team because of a new point system, regardless of its numbers, has an equal chance to capture the Bews Championship. Proof of this lies in the final standings. Every faculty for the first time in years has been represented in the top 10.

Final standings and this year's individual sport champions review are as follows.

Conclusion

I would like to thank all the Athletic Sticks, Convenors, Coaches, Managers, Referees, and Bews athletes for their part in a great '74-'75 Bews season.

A big thank you for a job well done to Mrs. Sue Bolton. Looking forward to next year's events.

Women picket all-male Sportman's Banquet in Thunder Bay

THUNDER BAY, CUP — Indignation over the barring of a female athlete from a local sportsman's function resulted in a picket line set up around the banquet site here last week.

Led by the Northern Women's Centre, the men and women in the line were protesting the all-male annual sportsman's banquet because of discrimination used in the granting of its "female athlete of the year" award. The recipient Jeannie Tuomi, was allowed to accept the award and then ushered out the door before the meal commenced.

The Women's Centre had been tipped off by a local woman CBC radio host who discovered the case when Tuomi revealed it to her while being interviewed.

Banquet organizers said they would not discontinue the practice, as it was their "tradition". Some offered to help women athletes set up their own.

Reactions to the picket from men attending the banquet held at the Ortona Legion, ranged from indifference to open hostility.

Some engaged in verbal abuse while others announced that the Legion was on private property and the pickets "would do well to stick on the street".

"We received calls at the Centre all day", said one picket. Some were from women opposing the protest, claiming that the event was one of the "few pleasures their husbands had". Others said it's about time they discontinued this practice.

'TRACK'

On Sunday March 16 the 3rd annual Montreal Marathon was held in Montreal. Sunny skies and a stiff wind saw three Queen's freshmen run in the classic twenty six miles three hundred and eighty five yards.

The course contained a few small hills with approximately 11 miles into the wind and 11 miles with the wind. Over 150 people showed up at the start to test their endurance but only 48 crossed the finish line.

The race was won by Patrick Montuoro of Chicoutimi in a time of 2:39:07. As for the Queen's runners Max Barr finished in 2:57:31 to place 9th. Doug Brown ran 3:07:03 to finish 15th and Mike De Guida ran a good race to finish in the 19th position with a time of 3:12:18.

Hopefully our freshmen will be able to follow the footsteps of Dave Landriault, Frank Okah and Dieter Stein our accomplished senior marathoners.

WIC-ly News

By Flossie

Don't forget that the big WIC banquet is this Sunday at 5:30 pm. in lower Ban Righ. Doors will open at 5:15 pm so that the banquet can start on time. Cost of the tickets is 1.50 - but if you were on a winning WIC team this year you are entitled to free admission. See you all there!!

This is the last WIC-ly News article for the year. Barb McDermott and Flossie M. ## Henninger.

You'll get used to it.

The first sip of Henninger tells you you're drinking a different tasting beer. A German beer brewed here in Canada. Not just a Canadian beer with a German name, but a real German beer.

Henninger is brewed from an authentic German recipe. With imported malt and yeast flown in from the Henninger brewery in Frankfurt. It's doubly fermented and naturally carbonated.

So be prepared for different taste. Once you've got used to it you'll never go back to what you're drinking now.

Henninger. It costs very little more than regular Canadian beer. And it's at your Brewers' Retail outlet.

Government hides in closet... ...while students search for key

By Peter O'Malley

For Canadian University Press

There is a growing uneasiness and frustration in student groups these days concerning expected changes in government student aid policy.

Student organizations fear the increasing cost of post-secondary education will be placed upon the student. Tuition fees will be raised they argue, loans will be increased and grants decreased or cut off altogether.

The more optimistic predict that students will end up owing $5,000 to $6,000 upon graduation. But others, perhaps more realistic, suggest a resulting debt somewhere between $11,000 and $15,000, depending on the length and type of degree program.

Understandably, student leaders and representatives are demanding a new policy that promises a better deal. But the very structure and machinery operating behind the federal-provincial student aid program seems effective opposition a difficult task.

First of all, most Canadian students have little understanding of how important the role of the federal government is in student aid.

Because the loan scheme is administered by the provinces for the federal government, most student groups go after provincial bureaucrats and politicians when they seek change.

But it is the federal government, although usually in conjunction with the provinces, that formulates the basic student aid policy and is responsible for future amendments to the program.

There is no doubt that pressure on the provincial level is vital to the financial improvement of students. But carrying demands to the federal level could provide long-term benefits.

With that in mind it is necessary to take a closer look at the role of the federal government in the past and speculate on its future position on student aid.

Though many students may understand the general substance of the Canada Student Loans Act (CSLP) through their own transactions, not much seems to be known of the specific provisions of this statute of Parliament or how it came about.

Passed in 1964, the Act marked the decision of the federal government to get involved financially in assisting students who otherwise would not be able to attend college or university.

The government was probably influenced by much of the writing and publicity at the time regarding the elitist nature of "higher education" in Canada. Academics, politicians, journalists, and especially parents, called for a change in public policy in post-secondary education.

They wanted a system of financing student education which recognized that schooling beyond the secondary level was not a "privilege" for those whose families could afford it, but a social "right" for those who could prove the ability to attain a degree.

Increased accessibility to post-secondary education became a major political issue as the post-war "babies" came of age in the early '60s.

While it was one thing to make speeches about "universal accessibility", quite another to get the government to finance the proposition. Providing students with bursaries, scholarships and other forms of financial grants was consistent with the idea of education as a social right. But simply making it easier for students to borrow money to pay for their education was a cheap alternative.

From a political perspective, and from the viewpoint of those interested in improving financing available for students, one of the most significant aspects of the Act is its silence on what constitutes "need" and how it is determined. Consequently, the major questions of how much "aid" is to be received, whether parental contributions should be a factor, and all other matters relating to whom the CLSP would benefit were taken out of the public forum which Parliament, to a limited extent, provides.

This decision-making vacuum was inevitably filled by a consortium of federal-provincial bureaucracies. They, rather than the politicians have ended up quietly making vital social policy decisions about student aid.

no way for public opinion

Since last fall a secret federal-provincial Task Force on Student Aid has been operating. Their objective was to study the "more broadly based concerns in the area of student loans".

The terms of reference for the task force, as agreed to by the federal government and the Council of Education Ministers of the Provinces, are expansive:

"To give immediate consideration to those changes necessary in existing federal plans for student assistance in order to bring them into line with existing needs and educational patterns."

They will also examine and recommend "possibilities of coordinating and/or rationalizing" the CSLP with manpower training allowances, the occupational training program and other related income maintenance manpower training schemes.

There was some indication that the federal thinking regarding support for post-secondary education, including student aid, might take a new direction, as mentioned in the Secretary of state's address.

The membership of this federal-provincial task force consists exclusively of student aid bureaucrats. They are to continue to meet in closed session, releasing no information, until August 1975.

At that time they will deliver a report in closed session to the Council of Education Ministers. It is safe to presume that the report will likely be the outline of a coordinated federal-provincial master plan for student aid policy changes.

It is also safe to presume the final results of the long months of discussions will be a recommendation to move toward the eventual elimination of student grants except for those who can qualify for welfare; increasing tuition fees to reduce operating deficits; and the need for government funding; and increasing the amount of money a student will be able to borrow to pay for a college or university education.

In a document put out by Guaranteed Loans Administration, the federal Financial Dept. which deals with student loans, matters related to "lenders, repayment or collection" are dealt with. The first section of the report entitled "Basic Principles", begins: "The responsibility for the cost of post-secondary education to the individual student remains primarily with the parent (guardian or immediate family) and/or the student."

This 'basic principle' is clearly not a mere administrative criterion. Rather, it is a statement of social policy which has been frequently challenged by various groups seeking a better student aid deal. It is not contained in the Act or in the Regulations passed by the politicians. It is an example of special policy formulation masquerading as mere administrative problem solving, undertaken by the civil service with the passive approval of the elected legislators.

Other than one published document, the Canada Student Loans Plan Admin. Criteria we know nothing of other policy decisions the Plenary might make. But a document recently leaked from another government body dealing with the student aid question provides us with a report of what was decided in the 1974 meeting of the Plenary.

Included in the report were references to aid for part-time students, raising of the student loan ceiling to $1900 per year (likely to happen in 1976-77), calculation of the parental contribution tables, and hence a working definition of what constitutes "need."

Although there is no expected increase in the number of students enrolling in the upcoming years, the report states that "the actual outlay by the federal government in terms of CSL would increase sharply in 1975-76 and even more so in succeeding years." This can only mean a greater debt upon graduation for students if the loans are increased.

The critical point is that there exists no vehicle by which concerned parties can learn of let alone comment on, proposed policy changes.

And even when the whole plan is being "modified" through administrative declaration into a scheme resulting in graduates having their income drained for years, there is no way to inform or accommodate public opinion in the decision-making process.

We know that massive changes in thinking on the funding of post-secondary education are taking place. But because of the secretiveness that surrounds all the federal decision-making bodies involved in student aid, we are left to draw our conclusions from innuendo, hints, leaked documents, and analysis of patterns of past thinking.

But most student groups conclude that things are going to get worse for the individual student in the immediate future. The frustration lies in the fact that even an organized opposition will have a difficult time pressing for a reformed student aid program when no government body will admit its powers and real involvement in the program.

McNeill Project

Upper students are the answer

by Nancy Bowes

One of the basic assertions of the Taylor Report (1974) on "The Present Structure of Warden's and Dons in the Men's Residences" states that "the quality of life in residence falls considerably short of what it should be." From this same report came a recommendation to change this situation. That plan is now known as the McNeill House Project.

As described by Barry Brooker, Warden of McNeill House, the project consists of assigning the rooms in McNeill next year to fourth-year students and freshmen.

Why fourth-year students? They have experience with the university and greater personal maturity than, on the whole, cannot be found in a second- or third-year student. It is hoped that their leadership will allow life in residence to adapt to the expansion of a student's interests.

The aim of the McNeill House Project is to add another dimension to residence life. "The success of the plan depends on the response to the situation of the fourth-year students," Brooker affirmed. There is a real need to "change the experience of the people involved," because, as Brooker recognizes, "residence life is really what happens on your floor."

To illustrate the situation, Brooker drew an analogy between the monotony of the community and the diversity of a university. As he sees it, residence is now like the monotonous community when it could hold the diversity and excitement of a university.

Brooker is most anxious to project a concept of residence "as more than just a place to hang your hat. Rather, it should be a place where, through personal interchange, there is a chance for a personal growth equal to that outside residence."

Shelley Cavalier performs in Hanjo, one of three Japanese "Noh" plays produced by the Queen's Drama department. Called "Phantoms", the plays are directed by recently appointed Head of the Drama dept., Maurice Breslow. Performances continue tonight, Friday and Saturday nights, with curtain at 8:30. Tickets available at Drama Desk.

Book costs up, budget not; library cuts all across the board

by Barb Nyland

An inflation rate of 10-12 per cent for books and 14-30 per cent for serials combined with an expected budget for 1975-76 which will be the same for 1974-75 will mean across the board cuts in library service. Dr. J. C. Beal, chairman of the Senate Library Committee told the Journal.

The library has been trimming its spending steadily in the last five years. Since 1970-71 the acquisitions of the library have been cut in half, from 40,000 individual titles to 18,000 titles. These statistics do not indicate the number of duplicate copies ordered.

This cut-back in book buying means that many of the purchases requested by the university community cannot be made. Mr. Don Redmond, chief librarian, told the Journal that no specific subject area is suffering although the number of books ordered on a single subject have been cut to the barest necessities.

Redmond states that 20 per cent of the 13,000 periodicals currently held across the campus will have to be cut this year. They will be examined title by title. Some of those to go will be the journals held in duplicate by two departments.

Staff salaries make up 61-62 per cent of the library budget but Redmond states that because of lack of money the staff was reduced by 17 positions in 1972. Last year two top administrative positions were left vacant. This year 11 additional staff members are needed but instead another 7 positions will have to be eliminated. One effect of this lack of manpower, said Redmond, is that there is sometimes a three or four day delay in reshelving books within Douglas Library. Also Information Services cannot be staffed for as long as is really needed.

Both McMaster and Carleton were able, in their 1974-75 budgets to put aside a greater proportion of their money for acquisitions than Queen's: 34.73 per cent McMaster 33.74 per cent Carleton and 31.76 per cent Queen's. Redmond attributes much of the additional operating cost at Queen's to the large number of branch libraries.

Lack of space is adding to the difficulties of the library system. Redmond feels that Douglas Library will be "cramped" by 1979 if not before. This could mean erecting shelves in the Purple Room or removing carrels from the stacks.

Fred Cane, a student senator and student representative on the Senate Library Committee, has suggested that the students come to the rescue of the library. His proposal is to have the A.M.S. hold a referendum asking the students to give one or two dollars which would be set aside especially to buy books.

The Senate Library Committee has recently asked the administration to review the library budget allotment. "It is not a case of us saying that they, the university administration should do something about the library situation. They are pressed for money but we did feel that they should look again at the matter," said Beal.

ONLY THE SERIOUS GRADUATING STUDENT NEED READ THIS

The Consultant's Report to the Advisory Committee on Academic Planning — Ontario Council on Graduate Studies concluded that

The SHORT Canadian school year poses a peculiar problem not recognized explicitly in designing Canadian management programs. It is obvious that an annual academic calendar designed to meet the needs of an earlier agricultural community is not suitable for management programs.

Last year the University of Windsor recognized this problem and introduced a unique M.B.A. program accomplished in three stages

Stage I Basic foundation courses
Stage II Intermediate courses in desired areas of study
Stage III Advanced courses

Stages I and II consist of prerequisite courses designed to give the student equivalency to an undergraduate honours degree in Business Administration. The length of study for the prerequisite courses is based on the individual student's background as evaluated by the Faculty of Business Administration. Students who included such courses such as Economics, Mathematics, Statistics and other Business-related courses will normally require two semesters for the prerequisite courses. Students without such background will additionally require the summer term of study.

Stage III courses are taken in the M.B.A. candidate year. These courses require two semesters for completion. These advanced courses permit a student to study in depth in a minimum of two areas of Business Administration. Up to two one-semester graduate courses may be included from other Faculties within the University with the approval of the Dean of the Faculty of Business Administration. Course electives in Stage II and III provide an opportunity for either specialization or broadening of subject exposure in the following areas: Accounting, Administrative Studies, Finance, Management Science, Marketing and International Business.

In addition to course requirements, the candidate is required to prepare and defend a major paper.

If you have a B+ average apply today for acceptance to a program that will open many Opportunity Doors.

WANTED... THIS STUDENT!

• This student is approaching graduation and has already shown competence and is eager to take up the challenges of our day

• This student seeks an opportunity of making a contribution to society not possible to most.

• This student has the potential for excellence and will unlock doors for the benefit of others

• This student seeks to become a scholar in the business disciplines in order to keep growing

If you are a young man or woman who fits this description the Faculty of Business Administration has an opening for you in the following programs

• BACHELOR OF COMMERCE FOR UNIVERSITY GRADUATES
A calendar year (three semesters) program for graduates with a C+ or better overall average who wish to obtain a Bachelor of Commerce Degree in Honours Business Administration. (Entry into this program may be made in May or September)

• MASTER OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION
A B+ average on the above program and an acceptable score on the ATCSB test will gain your admission to stage III of the M.B.A. program

ASUS extra-curricular awards to begin in '76

by Nancy Bowes
Commencing in 1976, the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society will present the A.S.U.S. Awards at the annual A.S.U.S. General Meeting, held in the spring.

A selection committee of nine people from throughout the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society will receive nominations of members of A.S.U.S. deemed noteworthy by anybody who wishes to nominate them.

When the Arts and Science and Levana Societies merged in 1967, the awards scheme was discontinued. These were academic awards which stipulated that the nominee have achieved 80 per cent.

Susan Harper (President of A.S.U.S. 74-75) and Bob Atkinson (President of A.S.U.S. 75-76) felt that it was about time A.S.U.S. initiated an award system to recognize Arts and Science students (whether extension, part-time or full-time) who contributed to an area of university life other than athletics. Atkinson made it clear that the award is not reserved for those involved in student government. Many who work for SVB or the Job Bank, for example, go unnoticed.

The terms of reference for the award state that "the A.S.U.S. Awards will be presented annually to up to four members of A.S.U.S., who through example and action in non-athletic extra-curricular activities, have made a noteworthy contribution to the Queen's community."

The students honored with the A.S.U.S. Award will be presented with a plaque and will have their names inscribed on a larger plaque in the Red Room in Kingston Hall.

The award is not intended to mimic the Tricolor Award but to show appreciation to those students who too often go unrecognized and unrewarded.

Haitian deportation

by Jerry Molloy

Rosie Douglas who is facing deportation back to the barbaric regime of "baby Doc Duvalier" in Haiti vowed last Sunday night in the Union to keep up his struggle to inform Canadians of the true nature of the pending deportations of 1,500 Haitians.

Without dwelling on his own fate he said, "I've letters from friends in Haitian jails; if they don't eat maggots that float to the surface of the daily meal of corn mush then they die all the quicker."

"You've got to have some protein, there's more in corn-starch," Douglas, in a forceful and witty speech stated he could not keep silent about the overall involvement of Canada's large multi-national corporations in the Caribbean even though his words would aggravate his present deportation appeal.

He saw the Haitians plight as a terrible and tangible example of two interconnecting things. The first is the economic and political power wielded by over 60 Canadian Corporations throughout the Caribbean. They are actively supporting the status quo in such regimes as Haiti (i.e. 3 out of 4 Haitian banks are Canadian; Alcan extracts the bauxite, Bonanza oil of Calgary has exclusive rights to all Haitian oil until 2010 etc.)

More importantly, says Douglas, the huge corporations are in fact actually underdeveloping the Caribbean. They are generally resource companies extracting and exporting the Caribbean's wealth back to Canada and providing few jobs in return.

The second factor is the historical reliance of Canada upon cheap immigrant labour in times of economic expansion and development. Traditionally, Canada has favoured immigrants of European stock and when there were insufficient of those to labour cheaply in the mines and railroads, black, brown and yellow peoples were brought in. Douglas went on to say that Canada's overt racial discrimination in preferring Europeans ceased under the Immigration Act of 1967. At this economic boom time there was a desire for more cheap labour than the traditional sources could provide. As a result third world immigration has soared. In 1966, 76 per cent of immigrants were European and 6 per cent Asian; in 1973 39 per cent were European and 23 per cent Asian.

Douglas contended that the increasing problems created by Canada's monopoly capitalist system, inflation, unemployment, urban and social disintegration etc. have resulted in a search for a scapegoat. The government's recent Green Paper on immigration points its finger at the most recent arrivals from the third world. The Paper is to "stimulate a national debate to determine what sort of country Canada should become." It is, according to Douglas, preparing the way for a racist policy of stopping third world immigration and returning those no longer wanted. Douglas emphasized the plight of the Caribbean immigrant.

Forced by a rate of unemployment and inflation several times higher than that of Canada (though produced by the same economic system) the immigrant sees a new life in Canada, only to be forced to return. In the case of the Haitians Douglas states: "Sending people back to Haiti is sending them back to their death even if some were not politically involved when they left."

Douglas, who has been repeatedly threatened by Toronto's fascist Western Guard ended his talk with two appeals to Queen's students: (1) that students become involved in understanding the true nature of Canada's economic imperialism abroad and its racism at home and (2) that they actively support the "stop the deportation of the Haitians" committees formed by concerned Canadians across Canada in the universities, churches and political groups. Editor's note: Further information can be obtained at the SCM Office, Union Basement.

Masters and Ph.D. Programmes

University of Waterloo
Waterloo, Ontario

The Waterloo Programme in Management Sciences is designed to serve ambitious individuals in advancing their careers. We cater to those who can qualify for entry into an Applied Science Graduate Faculty, including graduates in engineering, mathematics, the sciences, and similar fields. Since our formation in 1969, we have graduated over 150 masters' and numerous doctoral candidates.

We stress the preparation of graduates to fully professional depth in a set of fundamental skills, thereby helping them to transform future unforeseen career demands into new career opportunities throughout their professional lifetimes.

Our approach is readily distinguishable from, and complementary to traditional MBA programmes, which expose their students to a wide spectrum of current successful management practices via "case study" methods and the use of advanced management terminology. Typically, their goal is early placement of the graduate in line management. By contrast, our goal is the development of professional staff. Because of his skill in quantitative and qualitative management problem solving, our graduate may work in staff positions at any level of the enterprise. By concentrating in depth on Applied Economics, Operational Research, and Organizational Behaviour (normally specializing in one of these areas), our graduate is well prepared for analytical and advisory work in a broad range of positions and occupational settings.

Studies focus on the use of mathematical and statistical models and the communication of their implications to executives, rather than on familiarity with current managerial language and institutional practice.

Our graduates have obtained positions both inside and outside Canada with major private corporations, with prominent consultants to private and public clients, and with governments.

Our programme has been recognized in 'The Ring of Iron' as one of the very few Centres of Excellence in Ontario graduate education in Applied Science (1970). Noteworthy also is the recent report of independent consultants to 'ACAP' which stated:

"There has been a concentrated attention on areas congenial to engineering. A high quality programme concentrating on depth rather than breadth has resulted."

Analysis of career patterns has revealed that over one half of the graduates in engineering are employed in an exclusively technical capacity for only a fraction of their careers. On less adequate data, such a pattern is visible also for graduates in other fields. For these individuals, management functions become increasingly important throughout the major part of their careers. In a related finding, over two thirds of those who continued technical work, were found, 15 years later, in occupations requiring activities considerable different from those related to their degrees. Such high mobility, often containing an upward, to the typical successful engineer, and to many others. In modern conditions, preparation for such mobility, through the acquisition of skills in managerial thinking, appears to be increasingly important. Our areas of study have been selected with this trend in mind.

Faculty research activities are emphasized heavily in our department, providing students with diverse opportunities for their required project or thesis work. We believe that contact with, and participation in some management sciences research activity is highly beneficial to the student. Current research topics include inventory and production scheduling problems under uncertainty, the economics of public enterprises, capital market problems and portfolio management, the design of information systems, and studies of worker motivation.

Detailed information regarding course offerings, areas of study, faculty members, time requirements, fees, and financial support is available from.

Women get shafted - again

by L.A.S.E.

The Intermediate Teams have been cut. They have been ruthlessly slashed from next year Intercollegiate budget. No word was spoken by the 48 athletes who were suddenly eliminated from furthering their Intercollegiate careers. No word was asked. No word was spoken by the 4,000 women who in turn pump $80,000 into the Athletic Council every year. No word was asked.

Words were spoken by the Women's Director of Athletics Ann Turnbull. She said 'I give up', to a committee consisting of men who had for years slapped down insistent requests for budget increases to better the financial situation of her 'Senior' teams. Reasons (?) given implied that she should not speak in terms of more money while at the same time being 'frivolous' with the money which they were presently giving her. In other words the intermediate teams were being perceived (and wrongly so) as frills; an unnecessary added expense.

The major issue at the present seems to be the budget cuts...and YES ladies and gentlemen, they are affecting the athletic program. All travel costs, accommodation costs, food costs, equipment costs, heating and lighting costs have risen dramatically.

The five athletic bodies whose budgets are officially sanctioned by the U.C.A. (University Council of Athletics) were told they were allowed a 6.3 percent increase to meet all of these spiralling financial commitments. In short the Men's Intercollegiate were allowed a jump to $107,895 from $102,000 and the Women's Intercollegiate were allowed a jump (?) to $49,137 from $46,000. Not taken into account was the fact that the women's budget was already insufficient to meet their needs.

As in all other facets of life at this University, I think it is time that athletics sat back and started thinking in terms of realistic sacrifices. I said realistic.

I have some proposals to make then, in respect to saving money: a) all teams of fifteen members or less, whose equipment is not too ridiculously burdensome, be required to take a van to all travel points within a 240 mile radius. A four hour drive in a van with 14 other people is about the limit one can ask.

b) That all training meals (meals received free by the athlete from residence cafeterias before and during the season after practices) be eliminated except for those athletes who are indeed staying in residence or those who are expected to report before classes start in the fall.

c) That all equipment purchased by the University remain the property of the University; and that all equipment purchased by the athlete remain the property of the athlete; and that there be no sharing of costs of equipment by the University and the athlete unless in an extremely unusual situation in which the attention of the U.C.A. would be directed to a particular case before a change in above stated policy could occur.

d) That all accommodation policies require athletes to stay overnight in triple or quadruple rooms in hotels. The savings in monies to the University from the change from singles and doubles (the way some teams have it) to doubles and triples (the way the other teams have it) would be great indeed. It is the rare team trip which requires more than one night's accommodation and certainly it is no hardship to sleep three or four in a room

e) That team managers be required to return all monies not spent on team trips and present receipts accountable for monies which are spent.

f) That all teams be limited to the number of team members required for the efficient functioning of that team. This is an arbitrary number which depends entirely on the nature of each sport in question. However for example in basketball, the limitations for number of team members carried could be 2 full strings, or 10 players. For hockey it could be three full line changes plus a goalie and back-up goalie, or 17 players. For Volleyball it could be one full string plus 4 substitutes of 10 players.

g) That hostessing duties for Queen's be limited to one drink per player-coach-referee after the game; unless in such case of a tournament or all day meet where box lunches be supplied at cost to the administration of the other team. h) That all exhibition-invitational games over and above the reasonable number of exhibition-invitational games already allocated be considered the financial responsibility of the coach and team rather than the University. It is the responsibility of the U.C.A. to ensure that all athletic bodies adhere to the term 'reasonable number' of exhibition-invitational games as specified by the U.C.A. It is also the responsibility of the U.C.A. to see to it that all teams be looked upon as equal in status, that none should reap benefits by being considered by this council to be a superior team resulting in unrealistically large sums of money being allocated to it, with the sole purpose of increasing player comforts.

i) That on all away trips the teams be required to travel to the game and return the same day if at all feasible. That the team would travel on the day before a game-tournament and stay overnight in a hotel only if travel on the same day would cause undue hardship (ie leaving before 7:00 am. to arrive and play immediately). That the team would stay overnight and travel home the day after a game only if travel home on the same day would cause undue hardship (ie travelling home from Sudbury after playing a night game) in which case the team would likely land back in Kingston at 5:7:00 am.).

All of the above proposals take into account frivolities which Queen's has freely been indulging in for many years. It is time for a re-evaluation of the situation.

The CRUNCH has come, and it just so happens that those people who are feeling it immediately are the Women's Field Hockey Basketball, and Volleyball teams—and unfairly so! There are really so many other ways to scrape up the money which is REALISTICALLY required by all of the athletic bodies, without needlessly and ruthlessly eliminating the further opportunities of Intercollegiate activity for 49 athletes.

The interest in the three team sports which have just been slashed is such that a second team representing Queen's in each of these is fully warranted. Field Hockey and Power Volleyball are probably the two fastest growing sports in Canada, for women. There is now a keen interest in both the high school and University levels by women to participate in both of these sports, at a high level of competition.

In effect, the main problem seems to be that because men do not carry Intermediate teams they will not recognize that women have a budgetary need at all until the Intermediate teams are cut in spite of the fact that:

(a) OWIAA recognizes 2nd teams.
(b) 2nd teams allow participation. Queen's women want to participate on 2nd teams, therefore it must be recognized that there is a demand

(c) Intermediate teams placed 1st, 2nd and 2nd in the OWIAA this year in spite of the fact that they were second and third hand uniforms, practised only three hours a week, never had training meals and used second hand equipment all year.

It is high time for a major readjustment in the thinking and values of the members of the U.C.A. who insist that to justify support of a full-fledged 'Senior' program it is necessary to make 'sacrificial lambs' of the 3 second teams in the three most popular sports in Women's Intercollegiate Athletics.

When all is said and done it should be realized that the Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Council is not asking for extra cash. They are asking for what is already theirs. The women at the University contribute $80,000 towards athletics at Queen's and last year saw only $50,000 of that being spent towards their Intercollegiate and Intramural Athletic Program.

In effect, the Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Program is not asking for an equality in budget with the men's Intercollegiate. They are asking only for an equality in policy which determines the efficiency with which the monies allocated are spent.

What is needed is a very serious and objective look at the entire program as far as budgets go, by the University Council of Athletics at Queen's.

letters to the editor

Extortion

Dear Editor,

Mr. Friday's letter in the last issue of the Journal raises a number of interesting and important questions. If his facts are correct, as I assume they are, they deserve far more serious consideration than has been apparent from the university administration thus far.

As he states, it is one thing to raise the rent in April or September when students at least have the option of staying or leaving, but it is quite a different matter to raise it at the end of January. This basically amounts to an apparently legal form of extortion. As a university student I am both surprised and disgusted that this incident has received such an indifferent response from the administration of an institution which supposedly sets many of the moral and ethical standards on which society operates.

Now that Mr. Friday has raised the issues, both he and the university community deserve more adequate answers than those which have been forthcoming to this point. Perhaps Mr. Richardson (head of Housing and Property Management, and/or the unnamed Geology professor might care to comment.

Yours sincerely,
John Ronson.

Infobank

Dear Editor,

Unfortunately, word has reached our ears that the impression conveyed by the article, last week in the Journal (Mar. 18), concerning Information Bank was that Circle K had taken this service over from the AMS and would be operating it independently.

It was never our intention to make it look this way, and apologies are due for any misunderstanding the article may have created. InfoBank will remain an AMS service; it will simply be administered by Queen's Circle K, which is itself an AMS club. Ordinary students will still, as before, volunteer their time to run the John Orr Room. InfoBank will be making quite an impact on the student body next year; that we promise.

Athletic budget

Dear Editor,

I was delighted to observe the prominent way in which you drew attention to the plight of the Athletics program at Queen's in your March 21 edition. For a number of years now, the Athletics Budget has been restricted to increases approximating one-half the prevailing rate of inflation. As a result, programs at all levels have been paired down to subsistence levels and equipment replacement has been reduced drastically.

However, your very informative chart and accompanying article severely understate the present predicament. The author of that article has mistakenly used the figures from the penultimate draft of the Athletics budget, which was submitted to the University Council on Athletics by the various Athletic Committees after their first drafts were sent back to them with clear orders to reduce their spending estimates so as to keep within the 6.3 per cent increase. The figures presented in your chart were in response to this directive. The original proposals from the various Committees were significantly higher.

As you can see from the accompanying chart, all Committees initially proposed budget drafts which exceeded the percentage increase in funds which had been made available to the University Council on Athletics. I would point out too that these original drafts were produced by the various committees after they had received a stern reminder from the Budget Committee to "bite the bullet" yet again.

The "total proposed deficit" of $27,145 is a gloomy indication of the fact that all existing Athletic programs will have to be reduced from their present levels. As indicated in your article, the Women's Intercollegiate Committee has seen fit to eliminate their intermediate volleyball, basketball and field hockey teams. I would point out that the Men have had to "bite that bullet" several years ago and at the present time have no intermediate intercollegiate teams. Both the intercollegiate committees have had to cut down on exhibition schedules.

Would you be so kind as to print the accompanying chart by way of classification of your earlier article?

How it works ...

What happens is, you're sitting in a theatre, watching this movie, when...

Suddenly, an advertisement is flashed on the screen for 1/3000 of a second.

This message is flashed so fast, you are not even consciously aware of it.

But...hoo hah! Your unconscious mind is plenty aware! If read the message!

And now, you suddenly have an amazing craving to drink a bottle of "Coke"!

This is amazing mainly because all of your life you've always hated "Coke"!

How it can be used ...

Think of the potential uses for this kind of sneaky advertising. Like for instance, in political campaigns...

Or like if the Movie Industry wanted to eliminate competition by dealing a death blow to the Television Industry...

Unless the Television Industry wanted to render that possible use harmless by making sure few people ever see it.

Then there's always the use special-interest groups could make of sneaky advertising on signs we MUST look at.

The government could drop suggestions strategically, and all your anxieties about H-bomb tests would be relieved.

And best of all, some sneaky ads here and there, and people could be influenced into reading good books again.

Subliminal advertising laid bare

Students' rites.

make it with Gilbey's the tall 'n frosty one

by Tony Davis

A recent furor has been created in the past few months over the issue of subliminal advertising. This concept presumes that advertisers have implanted images within the numerous forms of ad media in a conscious attempt to subconsciously condition buyer's attitudes. B.W. Key, a professor of Journalism at the University of Western Ontario, has written a sensationalist work dealing with this topical problem. The public at large was sufficiently incensed to demand legislation against subliminal advertising. The Canadian Radio and Television Corporation (CRTC) in response has suggested a number of amendments to cover the outcry.

But the controversy had begun. Advertising protested that subliminal advertising was not being employed. Women's Liberation Societies accused advertisers of covertly designing sexist ads.

A study by two Queen's School of Business professors: Stephen Arnold and James Barnes, with a fourth year commerce student, Ken Wong, submitted a paper to the CRTC, asserting that studies into subliminal perception were as yet untried. They point out that legislation against subliminal advertising would be tantamount to admitting the problem to be a valid one and that it would be quite difficult for a television or radio supervisor to recognize subliminal ads: if one could the ads would not have been successful.

In any case: "to subliminally influence an individual and have him state that he is thirsty does not automatically mean that he will drink". To apply a scientific means of influencing thought to unscientific minds is too unpredictable. Professor Key's sexual images can be perceived because those are the frames of reference he applies to his readers. He tells one to see sex-and they see it.

In the facing page are a number of cartoons from Mad Magazine circa the late fifties. The present page illustrates a number of advertisements such as Key would assert to contain subliminal suggestions. The "Student Rites" ad is a national ad which has been frequently carried in the Journal. Can one perceive the words "sex", or is this what we are being told to recognize? What do you see?

The two ink blots represent a golden opportunity for Queen's students to tell what they see. Send a letter through the campus mail care of the Queen's Journal, Student Union, or drop a note in the Journal door. What is in these blots?

Animal Imagery?
Death?
Sex?
Family?
Or Other?

Often, what you are told to perceive you will perceive. This illustrated guide to subliminal advertising will be preceded in the next issue of the Journal by an article dealing with the problem. In the meantime, write and tell us what you see in the ink blots, or in the surrounding ads.

There's Noh business...

by Donald Stephen
We who on shallow hills have built our home...
In the heart's deep recess seek solitude.

Kwanami (1333-1384)

In Convocation Hall, Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week and this, the Queen's Drama Department is presenting Phantoms, a suite of three "modern Noh" plays under the direction of Maurice Breslow.

Breslow and company have set themselves an adventurous task. The three plays, 'Hanjo', 'The Lady Aoi', and 'The Damask Drum', by Yukio Mishima, stem from a tradition of Noh that goes back almost a millennium, a rich and complex tradition of which they and the majority of their audiences know relatively little.

From the very beginning, the plays are stripped of much of their cultural context. It cannot be expected that audiences will grasp oriental allusions or be in a position to appreciate the treatment given to these modern Noh in a context of and in contrast to the centuries - old traditional presentations of these stories.

Everyone, then, is at a cultural disadvantage. Phantoms is not The Mikado; it is genuinely foreign to both sides of the footlights. Therefore, to criticize the production on the basis of its Japaneseness or lack of it is absurd. A spectator can only see how the material of the plays themselves strikes him, and then gauge how well the company have dealt with that material.

The plays do not have complicated plots. In 'Hanjo', a beautiful, deranged Geisha awaits the promised return of the man she loves, he returns only to find that what she truly loves is an ideal man that she imagines.

David Lepp and Janet Snarr in Lady Aoi

Ralph Peter and Pam Robinson in The Damask Drum

In 'The Lady Aoi', a husband comes to the hospital sickbed of his wife and meets his former mistress; it later turns out that what he has met is a "living phantom", an embodiment of his mistress's baleful jealousy. In 'The Damask Drum', an elderly janitor falls in love with a beautiful young socialite that he has seen; he is humiliated by her and kills himself. His spirit returns and summons the woman.

Action is not of central importance to these plays. What matters is the subtle evocation of poignant and delicate emotions. And that is a conception of theatre unfamiliar to many.

Without exception, the actors and actresses overplayed their parts. They failed to show the restraint and reserve of inner strength that these plays need.

Mishima's Noh aim to create a different kind of dramatic tension from the ones we are accustomed to. They aim for "what lies beneath the surface"; the subtle, as opposed to the obvious; the hint, as opposed to the statement. This is not to say that the acting was poor; it was simply unremarkable and not especially suitable in its style.

Russ Waller's sets are balanced, simple and clean. For 'Hanjo' he has designed a curious, sparse, steeply-raked circular platform of a stage that produces a small amount of awkwardness for the players, but is very interesting to the eye. Richard Bronskill's incidental music is equally pleasing to the ear.

The plays themselves stand up well, demonstrating a neglected and difficult option for the theatre - poignancy that does not cloy.

There is much to be said FOR the production. It is the sort to broaden actor and audience. Breslow and company are to be commended for their willingness to explore this foreign and fascinating art form.

Shelley Cavalier in Hanjo

Prof playwright interviewed

Interviewed by Geoff Swift
An interview with Keith Johnstone whose plays 'Shot by an Elk' and 'Bits' are being presented on April 2, 3, and 4 at the Drama Department at 7:30. Admission is free.

JOURNAL: Why did you write 'Shot by an Elk'?
JOHNSTONE: A short play of mine called 'Moby Dick' has been produced many times. It has even been pirated by some obscure Toronto theatre company called Factory Theatre. It's about Sir Harold who is impotent, and his servant Perkins, who has been fattening one remaining sperm in a goldfish bowl. As people have liked the play, I thought it worth trying to base a longer one on the same characters.

Concerto concert

A Concerto Concert, which will include the premiere performance of Kirk Elliott's introduction, prelude and blugue, with the composer as violin soloist will take place in Dunning Auditorium on Wednesday, April 2 at 8:30 p.m. This concert, by the Queen's Chamber Orchestra under their director David R. Keane, is the final event of the current academic year to be presented by the Music Department.

Works by Charles Ives, Handel, J. S. Bach, Sibelius, Kirk Elliott, Mozart and Bela Bartok are included on a program which features four soloists, and the Chamber Orchestra. The soloists are: Fred Henderson, trumpet, a fourth-year B. Mus student, in Handel's Suite in D Major for Trumpet and Orchestra; Morna Douglas, piano, a first-year B. Mus student in Mozart's Piano Concerto in C Major; Kirk Elliott, a graduate B. Mus. in his own composition, of which he says the "Introduction is about nothing in particular, the Prelude attempts to capture some of the strange emotions and dreams encountered during a bad case of 'flu', and the Blugue in the 20th century style of 'crunchy' violin playing as opposed to the main 'smoothly' tradition. Heather Marshall and Hugh Agnew, recorders, and Michael Bodzasi, violin, share the spotlight in Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 4. Hugh Agnes is a 4th year history major; Heather Marshall, a graduate student in Chemistry studies plays, recorder and flute with Mario Duschene.

JOURNAL: Is the present play in bad taste?
JOHNSTONE: What is good taste? Lots of things that other people swallow make me throw up.

JOURNAL: Don't you really care what other people think of you?
JOHNSTONE: I don't see my writings as expressions of my personality. I don't think I've anything to do with my imagination.

JOURNAL: What's your experimental about this production?
JOHNSTONE: It's being acted by my experimental theatre class. And I don't think the actors are scared of making mistakes - if that's experimental.

JOURNAL: Why did you direct this play instead of one of your others?
JOHNSTONE: I think people would prefer this one. It's a comedy.

JOURNAL: Are you a real playwright?
JOHNSTONE: Compared to T.S. Eliot - yes.

JOURNAL: What about your European experience?
JOHNSTONE: Enthralling. But she didn't respect me next morning.

JOURNAL: What about your other plays?
JOHNSTONE: I wrote two in the fifties that were produced at the Royal Court Theatre in London. Then I didn't write anything for about ten years. Recently I directed one of my plays in Tubingen in Southern Germany and in Denmark.

JOURNAL: What did you do at the Royal Court?
JOHNSTONE: Lots of things. I ended up as Associate Director.

JOURNAL: Why did you leave, and what did you do?
JOHNSTONE: I was at the top, and I didn't really agree with my colleagues, so there was nowhere to go but out. I ran an improv group called the Theatre Machine. We used to tour in Europe, and the Canadian Government brought us to Expo.

JOURNAL: Is it true you're a friend of Samuel Beckett's?
JOHNSTONE: No. He thought he ought to encourage young writers, and he used to take me to lunch when he came to England. He's a very considerate person, but I used to complain that his plays were morbid, and why should he go on taking that sort of shit from me?

JOURNAL: What's your real occupation?
JOHNSTONE: I don't know. I'd teach even if I wasn't paid, because I find it therapeutic. If you mean how I earn money, you could say I teach in universities in order to have more time for writing.

JOURNAL: What is your biggest wish or ambition?
JOHNSTONE: It would be nice to run a theatre again, once that was successful, without producing rubbish.

JOURNAL: Do you anticipate any disturbance in the audience during this production?
JOHNSTONE: Laughter. Prolonged applause. I imagine you're asking this question because some people are rather prudish. And I suppose you're thinking of the shorter play called 'Bits'. I don't think either play would seriously upset the average person. After all, people put up with a park full of dog shit, and with asbestos fibres in the drinking water: what can I do that would offend them? Don't bring Aunt Edna along - no, bring Aunt Edna along. Why should we assume that only the old and prudish?

The price of freedom

By Fredrick Forsyth

by Lizbeth Haworth

Forsyth's latest novel, The Dogs of War, is of the same high calibre as the other two successes, The Odessa File and The Day of the Jackal. There is the same kind of compelling, exciting story, and the remarkable attention to detail which is never dull or confusing. The plot is timely in view of present world economic and political conditions, and it is lent a striking authenticity by Forsyth's fascinating knowledge of underground arms and black market dealings.

The story concerns the plot of one Sir James Manson to gain a monopoly on a fortune in platinum in an insignificant Africa state. Sir James is a cynical, ruthless, unscrupulous business magnate, whose immense fortune has been amassed by not altogether honest means. Conveniently the African state, Zangaro, is poverty stricken, obscure and in the hands of a mad dictator who is quite unaware of the existence of the precious ore. In fact, Zangaro is the perfect target.

At first, things proceed slowly, as Manson carefully searches for ways and persons through which he can anonymously direct his campaign. Finally, he chooses the man to be in charge of the fine details of the overthrow of Zangaro, on which everything rests: Cat Shannon, a mercenary soldier. Shannon and his cronies are the "Dogs of War" whose bravado, recklessness and intimate knowledge of the business details of war make them the hired mechanics of those who have money and a battle to fight.

BOOKS

Cat Shannon carries along the rest of the story, as he arranges the details of the job, which is to be completed in one hundred days. Everything can be done for a price if directed through the right contacts, and Forsyth has left no stone unturned in his research. As the days are counted off, the tension begins to mount, although Cat Shannon himself is organized and calm, overseeing all the purchases and keeping track of his budget. The closer the date of attack approaches, the more it appears that something must go wrong, yet unbelievably the whole plan remains safe.

The attack and overthrow of Zangaro takes no more than a few paragraphs to describe; it is almost insignificant after the intricate preparations. What makes The Dogs of War outstanding is the unexpected twist which Shannon contrives at the last moment, revealing a complexity and humanity in his character barely hinted at earlier. It is anticipated yet its form comes as a surprise. This philosophical streak in the author shows also when Shannon, taking a rare respite from the demands of his job, defends his profession to Julie Manson, his insatiable girl friend who is also Sir James' only daughter. Shannon explains world power struggles in terms of economics and the Dow Jones Index, calls it "the big con" perpetuated by the politicians and establishments. By becoming a mercenary, agent free to pick and choose his own leaders, he has avoided being conned himself, but at the price of becoming an outlaw in the eyes of society.

In entertainment, a superb story and depth of characterization, Forsyth has proven himself again to be an outstanding novelist. The Dogs of War should be first on the reading list of anyone who has ever enjoyed adventure stories that are so realistic that the book is not put down until the last page has been absorbed.

Electronic music obscures individual

Tonto's Expanding Head Band
Atlantic Records

by Dave Card and Tim Runge

"Sanity is not a possession to be prized. It is a quality of thought, a state of mind." This is a slight alteration of a quotation by Daphne DuMaurier in her famous novel Rebecca, a quotation which seems appropriate to Tonto's Expanding Head Band, a recent album by Robert Margouleff and Malcom Cecil. The presence of that quality of thought and state of mind in these two "artists" seems questionable when listening to the first cut on the first side of the album and even more so after having listened to the last cut on the last side. What this album has accomplished, under executive producer Herbie Mann, is something which makes Pink Floyd's Dark Side of the Moon, sound like Bach chamber music.

To say the least, what Margouleff and Cecil have composed and performed is "interesting." Every sound on the album is produced by Moog synthesizer, with the exception of "Riversong", in which we hear some rather obscure lyrics sung by "Tonto".

Side one consists of three compositions, two of which have a tradition jazz sound, the other, "Jet sex", sounds like four minutes of copulating frogs. Side two has a distinctly meditative and hypnotic quality. "Aurora", aptly titled, sounds like a cut from the sound track of 2001: A Space Odyssey. "Riversong" contains a computerized chant which may be interpreted in several different ways, depending upon your state of mind at the time of listening. The last piece, "Tama", has the unusual dreamlike sound of a walk along a lonely ocean shore.

Tonto's Expanding Head Band is another example of an ever increasing number of records produced today which depend on electronic means to create "music". More and more the individual musician and his conventional instruments are suppressed by those who seem to think the public wants electronic music. Is the individual musician to be replaced by the electronics engineer? When will the public cry out that it has had enough? No doubt the Moog has its place amongst other musical instruments, but hasn't it been over-worked of late?

If you like Pink Floyd, Tonto's Expanding Head Band, should satisfy your tastes and provide an entertaining evening of imaginative music.

You'll remember it.

Whether you're drinking Henninger for the first time or re-acquainting yourself with the Henninger you used to drink in Germany, one thing's for sure. Henninger has a taste you won't easily forget... a taste quite different from Canadian beer.

That's because we adhere to the original German recipe: the same two row barley, the same natural carbonation, the same brewing time. We even import malt from Germany. So when you drink brewed-in-Canada Henninger, it tastes the same as if it came from Germany.

Henninger. The different tasting beer you'll remember. And it costs only a little more than regular beer.

Available at Brewers' Retail outlets everywhere.

Colour Night Spectacular

by L.A.S.E.

Thursday March 20th saw the last official athletic event of the 1975 season. Colour Night '75, in all of its splendor and glory brought together for the first and last time this year all five hundred intercollegiate athletes for two and a half hours. (That's probably all we could have lasted anyway!).

It quickens the heart to see male and female athletes, intermediate and senior athletes, athletes from individual and team sports all sit down together to eat the same meal. Grace was said by Padre Laverty and the toast to the University was made by Peter Watts.

It was at once obvious that some of the warm-up parties had supplied quite a bit of warmth indeed, as (in true Leonard Cafeteria spirit) some of the food never reached the mouths it was intended for.

After the fine meal Dr. R. L. Watts, our principal offered a toast to the athletes. Mary Anne Drinkwater, last year's winner of the Alfie Pierce Trophy, replied to the speaker. Awards were then presented.

This was started off by the coaches standing up at the microphones and saying a few words about their teams' accomplishments. Queen's "plaques" were then presented.

The "plaque" is Queen's major award. It is generally reserved for individuals and teams that have won OUAA or OWIAA championships, but on occasion may be awarded for special merit. "Outstanding Contributions" during an athletic career at Queen's are usually acknowledged with a special edition of this award. Bars to "plaques" were then awarded. This acknowledges those superior athletes who have already earned a plaque and who have subsequently made a particular contribution in another sport. Plaques were presented to 42 Queen's athletes while bars to plaques were presented to another 23. Queen's has much to be proud of.

Special Plaques are presented by the Intercollegiate Athletic Committee to outstanding players as indicated above or to a benefactor for exceptional services to Queen's Athletics. These special plaques were awarded to 11 Queen's people. One of them was Peter Watts the official giver of the "Toast". It was awarded to him for continued dedication to the promotion of Queen's Athletics.

Managers plaques (for specific managers whose administrative contribution has culminated in a team championship) were then given to four managers and one other manager received a bar to managers plaque.

The Intermediate Volleyball team received momentos for their OWIAA Championship.

Trophies were then presented. Queen's won eight Intercollegiate Trophies this year (5 OWIAA and 3 OUAA), a total of 20 per cent of all championships available to be won in the men's and women's Intercollegiate league!

Non Association Awards were given next and Queen's managed to win quite a few of them (eg. Molson gave out many ski awards for winning races. Awards were also given at the Can-Am Fencing meet etc.).

The men then presented their "Rookie" awards to players they thought should get them on 7 different teams. The Men's Intercollegiate also recognizes special players within a team and so 9 "MVP" awards were given.

The part of the evening that all of the athletes look forward to is the presentation of the "Outstanding Athletics Awards". These are four awards which are presented annually for outstanding contribution by Queen's athletes.

The first trophy presented was the Alfie Pierce Trophy. This was presented by Arts '53 as a tribute to Alfie Pierce who gave a lifetime of dedication to training and helping the Intercollegiate teams of the University. It is awarded annually to the male and female student who contribute most to Intercollegiate Athletics in the first year at Queen's. Awarded this year to Kevin Thompson and Gini Honeyman.

The second award is the Jack Jarvis Trophy which is awarded annually to the outstanding graduating student in Intercollegiate Individual sports as decided by a committee of coaches. It was presented in 1963, as a tribute to Jack Jarvis, who for 33 years was coach of the Queen's boxing team. Awarded this year to Jamie Neilson.

The third trophy is the PHE '55 Alumnae Trophy, presented in 1964 by the female members of Physical Education 1955. It is awarded annually to the final year woman student who has brought most honour to Queen's University by her athletic and scholastic achievements. This year it was awarded to Laney Marshall and Jane Petterson (co-winners).

The fourth trophy is the Jenkins Trophy which was presented by Mr. Thomas Jenkins in 1930. It is awarded annually to the male graduating student who has brought most honour to Queen's by his athletic and scholastic ability. This year it was presented to Peter Kopp.

The evening (at the banquet) ended with a rousing round of "Oil Thigh" at which time everybody joined arms, kicked up their feet and showed their respect for our Alma Mater. Athletes then dispersed to many many warm-down parties which lasted long into the night.

Until next year - here's to a great (and hopefully winning) 1975-76 season, and 'Cha Gheil!

Bews Banquet 75 PHESA

by Peter Watts

The 38th year of the Bews intra-mural program officially came to a close on Tuesday night with the annual awards presentation in Wallace Hall. The boys from PHE walked away with a majority of the hardware, winning the Bews, Adams, and Edwards trophies. The Bews trophy, awarded annually to the winning year went to PHE for the second time in the last three years. Kerry Powell, PHE athletic stick, was awarded the Doug Adams trophy as the athletic stick of the winning team. The Edwards trophy, named for Queen's Professor J.F. Edwards, was awarded to Dave Kay also of PHE. The trophy is named in honour of Professor Edwards, one of the creators of the Bews program in 1938, and is awarded to the person who has contributed the most to intra-mural athletics during the year. Dave served as chairman of the Men's Intramural Athletic Committee during the past year and took part in a number of sports during his four years at Queen's.

Two other trophies were awarded during the festivities. The Al Corlett Trophy, awarded to the winner of the Nordic ski race went to Phil Morrison of PHE, while the Commerce Cup went to Arts and Science, winners of the annual inter-faculty hockey tournament.

In addition, a host of pins and crests were awarded to participating athletes. Twelve gold pins were won by individual athletes who have played on 8 championship teams during the year. Eleven others picked up silver pins for participating on five championship teams while a total of 32 bronze pins were won by participants who were on three championship teams during the past year.

PHESA is the Physical and Health Education Students' Association. We deal mainly with the needs of the students in Phys. Ed. however, we do offer such campus-wide activities as a symposium (Violence in Hockey) and the Jack Hop. PHESA is not an autonomous organization as it associated with and aided by ASUS.

In previous years communication with the rest of the campus population has been somewhat lacking. We would like the university to become aware of the valuable contribution made by the students and faculty of the School of Physical and Health Education.

Phys. Ed. Semi

by L.A.S.E.
This past weekend also saw the last big official Phys. Ed. bash in the guise of a semi-formal. Held at the 301 Inn this annual affair turned out to be a very successful time. There were well over three hundred enlightened people in attendance (although there are only 250 in the entire school of Physical and Health Education). The group which played in between breaks was called Bujum, and when they finally got down to some good rock-and-roll the jocks jived and the party thrived. The whole evening was initiated by a gala banquet consisting of all kinds of fruits and vegetables, cheeses and meats and (of course) wines. Congratulations go out to Larry Aiken and his committee. They did a terrific job. All in attendance this year won't miss next years for the world.

WIC banquet

by Anne Galbraith
WIC wrapped up another successful year with the Annual Awards Banquet on Sunday, March 21. Following a buffet dinner, at which everyone succeeded in porking, (Pam S. we all saw you), plaques and pennants were presented to event winners. Individuals who had earned enough points by participation (you don't have to be a star) were then given their awards.

"Mug winners" included: Cathy Aikman, Brenda Boucher, Anne Brown, Anne Galbraith, Crystal Grove, Nancy Henderson, Sue King, Judy Riggan, Deb Stretton, Pam Scothorn, Ruth Vanstone and Kynda Wiggins. Pen Sets were won by: Margie (Flossie) Bartlett, Debbie Seisel, Kathy Jackson, Barb McDermott, Judy Riggan, Jan Schultze and Bev Watson. Silver Trays were picked up by

Betty Dickie, Janey O'Rourke and Bev Watson. These girls in particular should be congratulated, as it takes a lot of time to win trays. Dr. Dorothy Leggett of the Physical Education Faculty presented the Marion Ross Trophy to Janey O'Rourke (WIC stick of PHE), the overall faculty winner being PHE.

The evening was wrapped up with the introduction of Anne Brown, incoming chairwoman, who spoke briefly on some of her ideas for next year.

The entire WIC executive, especially Judy Riggan (chairwoman) and Mo Bouris (director of women's intramurals) deserve a lot of credit for all their efforts this year. Through constant planning and work they succeeded in increasing participation greatly over the year. So until next year, as Flossie B. would say "If you want to play a sport, PIC WIC".

Jobs tight for summer

Seagull Flood

For those of us planning to spend the summer in Kingston, the prospects of finding jobs are less than rosy warns Terry MacI, Co-director of Job Bank.

Started in 1970, Job Bank is designed to help Queen's students find summer employment in this city. This year, for the first time, it has joined Forces with Manpower who have been offering students the same services. In a reciprocal arrangement which is expected to benefit all concerned, Manpower will notify Job Bank of any positions it cannot fill and the Job Bank will do likewise in return.

Working in conjunction, the two agencies hope to provide a greater variety of help to students as Job Bank deals mainly with those part time jobs - painting, gardening etc. - which Manpower does not receive notification of.

The increased strain on the job market is foreseen by MacI to be the probable result of more students staying in Kingston for the summer period. Intersession seems to be having more appeal and the housing shortage has required many to take over and live in their houses in May. This increase in job-hunters is not expected to be offset by any growth in positions available however as necessary cutbacks have hit many employers hard.

If you are planning to stay in Kingston for the summer then, there are several things MacI urges you to consider. He warns you first of all not to expect a full time job right away - you may either have to wait for one or indeed settle for holding down a number of part-time jobs for the whole season.

One suggestion he does have however is that 3 or 4 students join in small "entrepreneurial" groups specializing in painting, yard upkeep or whatever. He sees such groups as having an increased chance of finding work and of making a good profit split among themselves. MacI stresses this idea as a viable and advisable alternative to the traditional, but vanishing, individual jobs.

Job Bank is now open and accepting applications in Career Planning and Placement. From April 14, it will also be open from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. when both the Co-Directors, MacI and Lynn Whitam will be available to answer questions.

'75-'76 Residence fees increased by 12.1%

by Paul Steep

Residence fees, already raised once this year, will be raised again. Currently a single room in Leonard field costs $1,342. For the school year of 1975-76 it will cost 1,505 dollars, an increase of 12.11 per cent or 163 dollars. Similar increases will be applied to double rooms as well.

In a report entitled "The Financial Situation of the Residences, Budgets and Fees" the Residences Board reported the fee increases will mean that the cost of residence at Queen's University "will be significantly higher than those expected to be charged to other students at other universities in 1975-76."

To give an example of the difference between costs at Queen's and other Ontario universities, residence at New College in Toronto, which includes 19 meals a week, costs $1,195.

Similar residence accommodation at Queen's, including only 18 meals per week will cost a minimum of $1,264 and range to a high of $1,557.

There are several reasons for the unexpected rise in residence fees. During this academic year, 1974-75, over-expenditures are now forecast as follows: Food Services 70,800, Wages, Custodial staff $14,800 and Others $9,500. The most significant overexpenditure is in the food service area, where Beaver foods have begun to experience the critical effects of inflationary changes in the costs of raw food. Also changes in the minimum wage legislation of Ontario have caused an overrun on food service salaries and wages. This problem will be complicated because right now negotiations are taking place between Beaver Foods and Local 229 of the Canadian Labour Congress, the hourly paid workers of the food service industry, and will undoubtedly result in increased wage costs. For the coming year there is now a projected overrun on next year's budget of $198,000. The Residence Board maintains a Retained Earnings account to cover unpredicted expenses such as structural and mechanical repairs. To cover the deficit there will be a cut back on services provided on Leonard Field. Also all projects for replacements, repairs or alterations have been cancelled.

Even with this the Retained Earnings account will fall dangerously low and there will be no money left should a major project have to be undertaken next year.

Why was Queen's caught so unprepared especially when other universities seem to be coping with the problem somewhat better? Internal Affairs Commissioner, Brian Copeland feels that part of it at least has been mismanagement. Copeland said that the Residence

Board should have been better able to predict the rising food costs and especially the rising wages since it was known well in advance that these contracts would run out this year. Copeland also added that another look should be taken at the Beaver Food operation on campus since their costs are among the three highest of Ontario Universities.

The Board is well aware that students applying for Residence did so based on the costs as they were published in January. Therefore students will be sent a letter explaining the increases and giving them the opportunity to withdraw without loss of their deposit.

Increased spending

For the first time in several years, the AMS Summer Budget was increased before receiving approval at the March 27 Outer Council meeting. After hearing AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) John Wilson, explain that the budget reflected the policy of the Executive and five Commissioners, Council members approved a $1,500 initial allocation for the filming of a 25-minute documentary which would point out to students the various areas of campus extra-curricular activity. Also approved were allocations of $100 for the Women's Affairs facet of the External Affairs Commission, $350 for Teleclinic, (a new medical referral service), $500 for the Birth Control and Abortion Information and Referral service, and $280 for the Drug Centre.

Kathy Wood, an Arts and Science rep on Outer Council was elected to the position of Outer Council Housing Liaison. According to Vice President Wilson, Wood's responsibility will be to communicate Outer Council's viewpoint to the University committees on housing, to bring information from these committees back to Council and to keep in touch with the Kingston housing situation.

A committee was formed to submit a brief by the first September meeting to Outer Council and then to the Ontario

Federation of Students which would state the areas and issue with which Council feels OFS should be dealing, and which would provide specific Queen's input on these matters.

AMS briefs

Proposed health council, more user input needed

by Dan McClelland

The Senate meeting last Thursday saw the presentation of a proposal to formalize the University Health Council into a standing committee of the Senate. The University Health Council has been operating over the past ten years supervising the Student Health Service.

In a report to Senate, P. B. Buchan, chairman of the Operations Review Committee, outlined the committee's proposal to "reclassify the Council within the existing Senate Committee structure" and to "spell out more clearly the responsibilities of the Council, its composition and membership".

Debate arose over the proposed membership of the committee. Rehab-Meds Senator Peter Lane felt that there "may not be enough user input into the Health Council" and suggested the list of members be extended to include an ex-officio representative of the Alma Mater Society.

Lane asserted that students have a "substantial financial interest" in the Health Service (each student pays 6-dollars in non-academic fees to the Student Health Service) and therefore have a "right of representation". The ex-officio AMS member would provide this representation. Another student Senator, Bob Stead of the faculty of Law, felt the proposal by the Operations Review Committee provided "ample student representation". The term "ex-officio" was "reserved as a position of expertise such as the Director of the Student Health Service" according to Stead. Stead questioned what expertise an AMS ex-officio member could afford; suggesting that the AMS member receive a standing invitation to attend all University Health Council meetings.

The membership proposed for the University Health Council by the Operations Review Committee consists of three students and three faculty members elected by the Senate and two ex-officio members, the Director or Student Health Service and the Director of the Psychiatric Division of the Student Health Service. Lane feels another elected student member should be added to the membership as well as the AMS ex-officio member. Lane cited the Senate Book-store Committee membership and the membership of the Senate Committee on Student Affairs as precedents for an increased student membership on the University Health Council.

The University Health Council, if the proposal is accepted, will set policy and consider budgetary matters of the Student Health Service. The increased student membership to the committee will provide a "broad base of student opinion" and will increase the input of the student user, according to Lane.

Gold Winner

Last Thursday night, at the Clark Hall Pub, the Science '76 Formal Committee held the draw for their lottery. The winner of the 100 gold francs (approximate value $300.) was Mike Ackroyd, a 3rd year engineering student. Special thanks goes to the many people who helped sell tickets and especially to our two top salesmen, Rob Stephenson and Jim Lesslie. (Science '76 Formal Committee)

Honorary degrees

Spring Convocations at Queen's University this year will take place over three days in five sessions - Friday, May 23 at 2:30pm; Saturday, May 24, starting at 10am and 2:30pm and Saturday, May 31, starting at 10am and 2:30pm. The ceremonies are to be held at Jock Hart's Arena.

Some 2,600 students are eligible to receive degrees from the School of Graduate Studies and Research, Queen's Theological College, Faculty of Education, Faculty of Applied Science, School of Business, Faculty of Medicine, Faculty of Law, School of Nursing, School of Rehabilitation Therapy, School of Health and Physical Education and the Faculty of Arts and Science.

During the five convocations, 11 honorary degrees will be presented. Of the eleven recipients, two have taught at Queen's and three are Queen's graduates.

The recipients include Rev. Samuel Delve, Anthony Adamson, Robert W. B. Jackson, F. Morris Wood, Dr. Sylvia Ostry, Edward Dunlop, Florence Bird, Herbert J. Hamilton, Margaret Laurence, Dr. A. Vibert Douglas, and J. Douglas Gibson.

A Year of Talk

A year of TALK: Pecci from the Club of Rome; Roche from the Federal Parliament; Maione from the C.L.C. and C.I.D.A. - talking on the problems stemming from the unequal development of our World.

Such talk may now be generated into political action. The international voluntary agencies and the churches have recently submitted a brief to Premier Davis recommending that the province match dollar for dollar the money given by Ontario's citizens for self-help programmes in the Third World. This if accepted will result in one dollar becoming four because Ottawa in turn doubles provincial donations, i.e. $1 donation plus $1 from Ontario - $2 and this doubled from Ottawa - $4 total.

The political role the student can play in getting such recommendations implemented was outlined by Pecci from the Club of Rome. Find out the position taken by ones political candidates and act accordingly. Letters written to Premier Davis and ones, local M.L.A. expressing support for the plan do indeed, influence election development assistance is non-governmental, village orientated and given without strings to encourage self-help development. # UNIVERSITY CENTRE:

Completion postponed indefinitely

by Sarah Yarnell

In the early Spring months of 1969, the Alma Mater Society unfolded the concept of a Queen's "university centre". In that year, the students pledged $5 per head per annum towards building the centre, a promise which was reaffirmed by referendum in February 1974. Plans for the centre were assembled, and a 3.5 million dollar budget approved for building an addition onto the Students' Union and renovating parts of the Union. This year, as the boardings went up at University and Union Streets and a deep gash was blasted into the limestone, it became sadly apparent that progress on a university centre would come to a sudden, temporary halt after only part of the centre would be completed. Inflation was blamed as the first phase of the project sucked up not the expected two million dollars, but almost all of the three and a half million dollar budget.

Original concept

The original concept for a university centre was outlined in 1969 by Ted Parnell, who was at that time the chairman of the AMS University Centre Committee.

"(The committee) began to realize that it (the project to build the centre) should involve the total university community. In this way, the project would serve to bring students, faculty, administration and alumni together. The present period of student unrest around the world, indicates clearly, the intense need to bring these elements together so that they may communicate and thus understand and appreciate each other more. This project will also help to stimulate the academic and intellectual environment of Queen's by providing a place where students and faculty may meet in an informal setting to discuss and continue the intellectual battles which exist in any great university."

"Queen's is a personable university that still cares about individuals. It still retains the 'Old Queen's Spirit'. But the university is growing very rapidly. Preservation of these qualities will be difficult."

"By planning a building with a 'community concept' in mind, the Alma Mater Society feels that it will be able to help retain these desirable qualities and prevent Queen's from becoming a large, impersonal, lonely and frustrating place."

During 1969, the AMS looked in many directions for financial support for building the centre. It hoped that the university would help out with some financial assistance, and it approached the Alumni Association which in turn pledged one million dollars; it was in this year that the students of Queen's promised by referendum to contribute five dollars each per year, until a total of $500,000 was reached.

A Steering Committee carried the concept further, and presented a report in 1970. The Users' Committee prepared possible designs by February 1973, from which the Board of Trustees gave approval to the current plan, which was budgeted at 3.5 million dollars. As the Board wanted to make sure students were still willing to contribute $5 each per year until $500,000 was met, and that operating costs of the new centre would be paid for when the centre opened, students were asked to vote in two referenda in February 1974. In the first referendum, students reaffirmed the pledge made in 1969; in the second they gave permission for the $10 Union fee (currently collected from all students which goes towards the operating costs of the Union) to be renamed the University Centre fee, which would help to pay for operating costs of the new building.

At this point a schedule was drawn up of who "would pay for what portion" of the capital costs of the project. It was agreed by the

Alumni

The Alumni Association, according to its new director Murray Gill, is prepared to go along with what is decided on the question of Phase II. The Alumni Association contributed 1.0 million dollars towards the capital costs of the University Centre.

In the tentative plans for Phase II, the Alumni Association was to be moved from its isolated quarters in the north corner of the main floor, to the lower level of a stratified Wallace Hall. While the association at first had "mixed feelings" about the plans to split Wallace into two levels, commented Gill, they approved them in principle as they "could see no suitable economic alternative". The location of their offices in Wallace would bring the association closer to the students, which is what is desired by the association, and would also provide increased space.

The Alumni Association has not been officially notified that they will not be moving into new quarters, said Gill, but realize that because Phase II does not appear currently feasible, they probably will be staying where they are.

Phase I took over $3 million

Construction of the new centre was split into two phases. Phase I, which last year was estimated at 2.0 million dollars, was to include the removal of 165 and 163 University Avenue, and the construction of new dining facilities and food preparation areas, an indoor sidewalk cafe, a bank, three or four retail outlets, a pub and storage areas. Phase II, estimated at 1.0 to 1.5 million dollars, was to include the renovation of the present Students' Memorial Union.

Blasting on the site where Phase I is to be built began in December 1974, and at this time it was revealed that building materials and other costs had risen so incredibly that the total cost for Phase I would be over 3.0 million dollars. This would leave insufficient funds for the renovations of the Union (Phase II). In light of this situation, the University Centre Users' Committee had to decide where to spend the remaining $475,000. The Committee concluded that the first priority would be to provide the required second-floor washrooms in the Union, necessary if the new dining facilities are to be licenced. The second priority would be to open up the front hall of the Union, providing for traffic flow to the basement level, and to construct a light well (sky light) at the centre. The function of opening up this area would be "primarily aesthetic" and would provide the required circulation space, according to Mr. Houlbjerg, the architect who advised the Committee.

It appears that Phase II won't be completed for several years - Godfrey Sprague, Chairman of the Users' Committee; Ian Nordheimer, Vice-President of the AMS; Bruce Trotter, Rector; and Dave Bonham, Vice-Principal Finances, all share this opinion.

Students' Union Fee

The history of the fee students pay towards the operating costs of the Union; Students' Union is a fascinating one which ties into the current situation of the University Centre.

Currently, however, $112,000 of the debt remains. Out of the $10 which both male and female students now pay to the University as the Union fee, operating costs of the building were covered, and out of the 1948 the present Union was opened (with the exception of the International Centre and the Grad residence, opened in 1965). In 1948, the fee the men paid in return for the off; food services in the Union, concerts, speakers and other activities hosted by the Union was raised from $6 to $10, in order to help cover the operating costs of the expanded Union. Women were charged a fee of $2 in 1948; previously they had paid nothing because they had been strictly prohibited from even entering the building. The $250,000 loaned by the University at 3 per cent interest rate, was taken out for expanding the

According to last Spring's referendum, the Union fee will become the University Centre fee as soon as the Centre is opened

Wallace Hall

At the time of last year's referendum on which the university centre, a petition was circulated which protested that Wallace Hall be split into two levels. The petition was signed by 150 staff and faculty, and by 400 students, according to Pierre Duprey, a Queen's Art professor, who considers himself to be their representative. Duprey is now a member of the University Centre Users' Committee as a result of that petition, and is heading up a Subcommittee to provide alternatives to stratifying Wallace.

Duprey says that he feels Wallace shouldn't be split because the "kind of quality of craftsmanship" which went into building Wallace, "we are never going to see again". He calls the architectural style of the room "collegiate gothic revival".

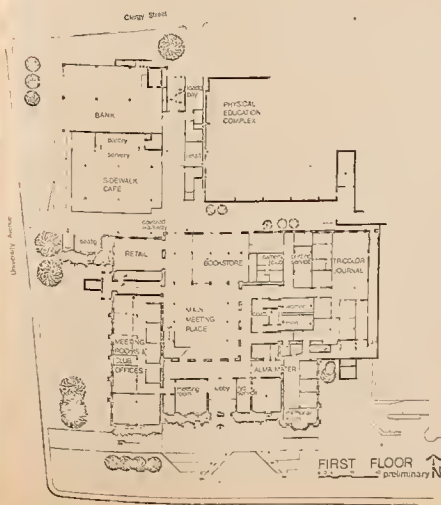

Duprey appears convinced that an alternative to splitting Wallace would "work out cheaper" than the current plan, which is to split the hall into two levels. He asserted, "Any architect wants to leave his stamp on a building, and Arthur Erickson and Co. are no different. However, this should be done in a sympathetic way... splitting Wallace is tantamount to a sort of dismembering. There are sympathetic aspects to Erickson's design, but the Wallace Hall caper is not one of them."

Duprey said that Wallace could be used as a lounge space which would be accessible, visible and would possess a formal, reflective atmosphere. It could also be a multi-use room available for small concerts, art exhibitions and buffet dinners.

The students in Duprey's Art History 290 class were offered a special project earlier this year - to redesign Phase II plans while preserving Wallace Hall. The students' plans will be judged by Duprey's sub-committee tonight on a basis of originality, artistic presentation, and practicality of design. The plans will be on display starting tomorrow in John Watson Hall, room 517.

Duprey hopes to have concrete alternatives to the current plan, by the end of April or beginning of May.

"Free" school

An alternate school in Kingston

by Meg Bottomley

Most Kingstonians are aware of the alternate radio station available to them, however, very few are aware of the alternate school system which is available to it's youngsters. Ms. Meri MacLeod, head teacher at Kingston's Alternate School, cited this lack of knowledge as being one of the main problems facing the school, which is in danger of closing. Its purpose from its inception in 1970 was to provide a non-sexist, flexible school program for the children in the city.

There was no set curriculum - the children were to have the freedom to grow and expand naturally. The result was chaos. It was apparent that the children needed some sort of order to work in constructively. For the next few years, the problem was to define 'freedom'; to see how much the children should be controlled without destroying the original concept of a free environment.

What evolved, and what exists now, is a school which consists mainly of structured play-periods and academic hours.

The younger children are guided in thinking games, pre-reading skills, phonetics, and physical exercises, designed to combine cognitive learning, awareness and responsibility. The idea is to make each child aware of his own self, and what he is able to accomplish. From this, the child develops a sense of responsibility to himself, which expands later into a sense of responsibility to the community at large.

The older children fill out contracts for the courses they wish to take. No courses are compulsory, but if a course is signed up for, the child is expected to attend.

The children are encouraged to create - painting, sewing, writing, embroidery are all considered to be aspects of art. Ms. MacLeod explained that one of the ideas behind the school (besides that of establishing feelings of responsibility), is to nurture creativity in all areas.

How do the children react? Very favorably, according to Ms. MacLeod and Marni. The children decided, on their own, to set up a grievance court, where they could air any complaints. If there is a conflict between two children, both sides get discussed, and a solution or compromise is reached. The decisions reached are mature and reasonable. The older children are eager to help the younger ones and the younger gain self-confidence because they know that they can talk about their problems to willing, fair arbitrators.

At this time, the Free School is in danger of closing. Parents are hesitant about sending older children, perhaps because they don't know if the school can provide a sound education. It is registered with the Ontario Board of Education and the students who have gone from the Free School into the public school system have done very well, both academically and emotionally.

Some financial support is needed. All the teaching staff has been on a volunteer basis, but next year Ms. MacLeod would like to provide two of the full-time staff with a salary. There is a 60 dollar fee for the school, on a sliding basis, but almost all of the children pay only a fraction of this. The income at present goes for supplies. Classes are being held at the Princess St. United Church. There will be a symposium and a workshop April 26 from one until four p.m., in the basement of the church to illustrate the needs and purposes of the school. Anyone interested in the Alternate school is urged to attend.

Jean Vanier

Founder of L'Arche to speak at Queen's

by Uncle Dave

Jean Vanier, son of the late Governor-General and Madame Vanier, is fast becoming one of Canada's best-known citizens for his untiring work among rejected "wounded" persons. Some ten years ago, after briefly teaching philosophy in St. Michaels College, he resigned to establish a small home for mentally handicapped adults in Trosly-Breuil, north of Paris. That home, called L'Arche, "the Ark", was to be the first of many now scattered widely in India, Africa, the British Isles, U.S.A. and several in Canada.

In 1975 he will be in Canada only briefly for a biennial retreat with the leaders of all the L'Arche homes. On May 23 the day before the retreat begins, he will address a Toronto convention in the morning and come to Kingston for an evening address. His address will be in the Jock Hartly Arena on Friday May 23, at 8:00 p.m. and is open to the public and the university. It is being sponsored by the Faculty of Education and various teachers federations.

As with all his addresses, he will receive no fee and there is no financial obligation to him. Hopefully, sponsoring groups and other groups can together present a gift of money to assist in defraying the costs of the weekend conference of L'Arche leaders.

Groups contributing to the joint gift may send their cheque to Queen's University, Faculty of Education. Attention: Mrs. M. Murdoch for L'Arche International.

For further information, contact Professor Mac Freedman, Coordinator, Professional Issues in Contemporary Education, Faculty of Education, Queen's University.

Summer in the Caribbean WUSC gets you involved

by Jackie Claxton

Outside of the travel section of the newspaper, people in Canada get very little opportunity to read about current political or social affairs in the Caribbean. This is unfortunate when one considers the great diversity which exists in this area.

Moving from west to east we find Haiti, the world's first black republic (1844), under the rule of dictator Baby Doc Duvalier, situated extremely near the bottom of any world per capita income scale, with an incredible mixture of french and african culture; the Dominican Republic, the scene of numerous American interventions is predominantly Spanish in flavour. Next door is Puerto Rico, an American dependency. This is a status some people would like to see changed. Martinique and Guadeloupe are departments of France. Trinidad, one of the most cosmopolitan of the Caribbean islands with its population of Blacks, East Indians, Lebanese, Syrians and so on, has to thank the presence of oil for its relatively high standard of living.

This summer, myself and another Queens Student, Ross Pennie, participated in a Third World Seminar sponsored by World University Service of Canada (WUSC). This organization's primary aim is to get university students, faculty and staff involved in the international development process by doing such things as raising funds for projects and educating Canadians about the Third World.

The seminar was held in the Caribbean and, in my opinion, its main purpose was to give the participants a chance to "see" a part of the world which is less developed than our own, in the hopes that upon our return to Canada, we would share our experiences with others.

Prior to leaving Canada, the 46 students and 6 professors who had been chosen to go, met together for a four day orientation session. We talked about the difficulties encountered when trying to communicate across cultures, culture shock and ways of sharing our experiences when we returned. All this however, was inadequate (at least for myself) preparation for the concrete reality of Haiti, the first island we went to. Here we saw, many of us for the first time, the effect of perpetual poverty upon men, women and children. We saw outside the gleaming white facade of the Bank of Canada, grotesquely malformed beggars of all ages, and in the streets late model foreign cars mingled with the brightly painted local taxis. These were the kinds of contrasts we had to deal with.

In St. Kitt's we learned what dependence on one crop, sugar, can do to an island's economy. In Barbados we saw the degree to which the tourist industry is both helping and hindering the island's development. In Trinidad we saw the way in which colonialism albeit an unofficial type still exists in the form of the Bank of Canada, the Banks of Montreal and Nova Scotia, Texaco Oil, Bata Shoes, and on and on.

Development I've discovered, is a personal thing. The WUSC seminar which takes place every summer in a different part of the world attempts to and I believe succeeds in giving Canadians a chance to become personally involved.

Most of us at university, get caught in the routine of essays, classes, exams...there doesn't seem to be much time to worry about other peoples problems. Sooner or later however, we have to realize that the scale of the problems has drastically increased. Population, food, energy, natural resources, these problems can no longer be solved at the national level but rather, require a concerted effort internationally. Their problems are now ours. For those of you whose interest has been awakened, the local WUSC committee is sponsoring a one day symposium on May 8th '75. Discussion will centre on the role of the university in international development. Any one may attend and participate. For further information call the International Centre at 547-2807.

Student summer projects

Interest free loans

Enterprising students who would like to work for themselves this summer may get help from the Ontario Government's Experience '75 summer employment program.

Qualified students will receive financial assistance to set up their own small businesses for the summer months. Assistance is in the form of interest free loans of up to $1,000 per venture.

The program is administered by the Ministry of Colleges and Universities with the assistance of Ontario Chambers of Commerce and the Royal Bank of Canada. Interested students select a venture and, with the help of members of the local Chamber of Commerce, analyse its business potential. These analyses are forwarded to a provincial panel for approval.

All applicants will be advised of the panel's decision by the end of April. Those who are successful receive a loan to cover the start-up costs of their operation. The loans are interest free for the duration of the project. After loan and expenses are paid, all money made by the students remain their own.

Projects that might qualify for this type of capital assistance are limited only by the imagination of the students and current market conditions in the locality. Preference will be given to projects which do not compete directly with established businesses in the community.

Examples range from cutting firewood to taking baby pictures and in the past have included such projects as salvaging logs in Lake Huron, vegetable farming, house painting, and silk-screening.

The aim of this program is to give community college and university students the opportunity to gain valuable business experience and to earn money at the same time. The amount of remuneration gained will depend on the planning and efforts contributed by the students to their projects.

To ensure that ventures are operated in a business-like manner, students will be required to use a standard record system and to submit periodic progress reports. Local businessmen will make themselves available to students as consultants. The Royal Bank is providing a full-time financial liaison officer whose services will be available to the students.

The summer business capital offer is only one of the 27 projects that go to make up the Ontario Government's Experience '75 summer employment program. Designed to provide 7,500 experience-oriented summer jobs to Ontario students, Experience '75 is co-ordinated by the Ontario Youth Secretariat while individual projects are administered by the government ministries.

Convenience?

Principal Watts and his financial advisors have been given an opportunity to demonstrate that Queen's is capable of adjusting to severe cutbacks in government funding of this university, with resilience and good judgement. At the March 28 meeting of the University Senate, it was decided to hold a Fall convocation providing that the necessary funds for this ceremony could be justified in relation to other university commitments. Inherent in this decision was the understanding that while Senators supported a Fall convocation, the job of deciding whether the expense of the ceremony could be justified would be left up to the Principal and his financial advisors.

The first Queen's Fall convocation was held in 1974. When Senate approved holding this ceremony, it asked its Convocation Committee to review the question of future Fall convocations in light of budget restrictions, preparation requirements and the number of graduates attending. The Convocation Committee, which has a unwieldy size of 31 student, faculty and ex-officio members, then asked its Executive Committee to examine the question and to offer recommendations.

The Executive Committee reported back to the Convocation Committee that no Fall convocation should be held in 1975 due to the direct and indirect costs of the ceremony, estimated at $8,000, and the fact that it would duplicate effort already required for the Spring convocation. However, the recommendation was not supported by the Convocation Committee who subsequently passed a motion proposing to its parent committee on Academic Procedures (SCAP) that a Fall convocation be held for graduate and undergraduate students in 1975. The Convocation Committee stated that it was aware of the financial constraints facing the university and that it was quite prepared to accept a more modest low-cost ceremony as an alternative to no Fall convocation at all.

However, the SCAP decided that it did not want a "half-baked" convocation as a convocation was in essence the university on parade, and could be interpreted as reflecting on the quality of the entire university.

So at the Mar. 28 meeting, Senators were asked to approve holding a full-fledged Fall convocation, the cost of which was estimated at $8,000, providing such an expense could be justified in terms of other university commitments. While they were reminded of the tight financial situation, Senators were also presented with an argument in favor of holding the Fall convocation. Because many graduate students and some extramural students complete their degrees in the summer, they were not eligible for graduation the previous spring, but many would not be able to attend the convocation held the following spring.

But convenience must be cast aside in light of the financial squeeze which forced Queen's to budget for a $1.1 million deficit in 1974-75. It is this financial squeeze which has made students in the sciences anxious about the deterioration of lab equipment and which has caused all students to be concerned about the possibility of a rising student-staff ratio as well as the decline in library acquisitions.

Principal Watts has cited these examples as being results of the cutbacks in government funding of the university, and has claimed on numerous occasions that such cutbacks are therefore threatening the quality of education at Queen's. A Fall convocation could not wisely be considered of greater priority than the maintenance of a low student-staff ratio and acquisitions of vital equipment and books. Principal Watts' failure to approve the Senate's recommendation that a Fall convocation be held, would be a wise move and would demonstrate that in this case, Queen's is coping intelligently with the financial constraints situation.

Biggie's Commem. Well, ladies and gentlemen, this is it - our very last attempt at journalistic creativity. As usual, the night was more than an animal show - Michel with his Hollywood cameras, finally put us all on film... Just think! STARS! and at Union and University! Ah, there's a never ending list of credits - Jackson and Alwood as our brutal, fighting, bitching, rotten-to-the-core Sports editors (they're really sort of pretty though, esp. the Alwood-God bless her) and then there's the Peter White Inc. who brings you your bi-weekly creative artistical news. Why, if it weren't for them, then what would jocks and engineers have to complain about? And then, of course the life of the lead office is our very own peeps! My God-what would we have done without Wrens and L.J. (probably cried, hats what). And, yup, there's good ol' Yarn, who was so scarce tonight and I don't understand why because she wanted so much to be kissed under the mistletoe. (I think you blew your last chance Babe, Rumour has it though that she's getting in shape for next year's challenges-I feel like a has-been.) But, how can one forget me favourite-Daniel-what can I say? If things would have been up to me, I probably would have gotten out of hand and run a magazine - good thing he kept me in line, eh? T.C., what can we say about T.C.? Give him $79.95 and you can own half his brain-we love him! All you guys, (and here comes the mush, yuck) THANKS! Everyone who typed those ridiculous classifieds and did layout and writing and playing and harassing and swearing and yelling and and... But to our illustrious leader, (who's responsible of course for ALL the mistakes you might have noticed) J. Morris - If he wasn't insane before he sure is now after this year of frustration. But we really do love you John - don't we guys...DON'T WE GUYS!

Grassroots

AMS constitution
Article 1
The Society
Section 1

The name of the organization shall be the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University Inc., hereinafter referred to as the A.M.S.

Section 2

The Society is a company incorporated under the Companies Act of the Province of Ontario, having its head office in the city of Kingston, in the County of Frontenac; and this constitution shall be subordinate to the said company.

Obviously, either this writer is labouring under a gross misunderstanding of the word society or else at some point during the past one hundred and seventeen years the term has lost its meaning at Queen's.

Today, AMS means politics; a miniature of Ottawa's Parliament Hill, and a weak model at that, even though the people who run the "company" make every attempt at parroting other governments. Today AMS is patronage, scandal, levies, services, smoky backrooming, and all the trimmings.

We no longer have a society but a group of individuals who generally fancy themselves as legislators of the future. They look to the Outer Council as being a convenient training ground with little awareness or concern for the lost brotherhood of Queen's men. We have lost sight of the fact that all students of Queen's collectively are the AMS. Few people today feel themselves part of any society or are even aware that they are members of the AMS.

No effort is expended in promoting the concept of a society but great pains are taken to make sure that every word in the society's constitution is correct. Every second Thursday AMS legislation 101 meets, and to what end? In the past two years Queen's has been given little concrete evidence of Council's existence.

If council would gain sight of an objective to regain the unification of the students of Queen's, perhaps more could be accomplished by its members.

This should also be the Journal's objective next year; to give students a look at our past, and examine the present in order to brace together for the future.

What will happen if we find ourselves in financial trouble? Without a strong society who will defend our interests?

It is hoped that the primary objective of council and the Journal will be to make a start at reintroducing to campus the idea of the Alma Mater Society as it once was. The student body.

Let the incorporated company be damned. Now that the physical needs of students in the way of services have been adequately met, we should de-emphasize the legal vehicle for accomplishing these ends. Let's bring back the AMS.

"Shaft" reply

Dear Editor:

The article "Women get shafted - again" which appeared in the Queen's Journal on March 27, 1975 deserves some comment. The major point of the article, that the Queen's athletic and recreation programs are suffering under the current, stringent, budgetary constraints is well taken. Unfortunately, the writer chose to make the article a female-male confrontation as well as offering useful information and insights concerning the current financial plight of the entire athletic and recreation structure. I would like to make it clear that all of the sub-committees of the University Council on Athletics, both men's and women's, had to make cuts in their requests. There are many specific points in the article that should be put into context and/or clarified. I hope that the following comments will help achieve these aims.

First, the Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Committee was asked to do no more than any of the other four Committees of the U.C.A., namely, to adhere to the 6.3 percent increase. Within this constraint no specific directive was issued as to the actions which the Women's Intercollegiate Committee should take in order to stay within the necessary budget. The choice to drop three important second teams was made by the Women's Intercollegiate Committee, not by anyone else. The assumption must be made that this group acted responsibly and dropped these teams because there was no other alternative and not for political "clout".

Second, on a more specific matter, I would point out that the jump in the Men's Intercollegiate budget (from $102,000 in 1974-5 to $107,895 in 1975-6) was 5.8 percent while the jump in the Women's Intercollegiate budget (from $46,000 in 1974-5 to $49,137 in 1975-6) was higher at 6.8 percent. Also, it is worth noting that since the inception of the current athletic and recreation structure through the Principal's Advisory Committee on Athletics (1970) the Women's Intercollegiate budget has increased by 32.8 percent while the Men's Intercollegiate budget has increased by only 11.2 percent. It would appear from these data that attempts are being made to be reasonable in the budget allocations.

Third, the editorial writer indicates that Miss Turnbull, the Women's Director of Athletics, had to concede to "a committee consisting of men." The compositions of the Committees in question do not support this observation. The Women's Intercollegiate Athletics Committee is made up totally of women while the University Council on Athletics with fourteen voting members has six female voting members and eight male voting members. The U.C.A. Budget Committee of four members was composed of two females (one of whom was in the Chair) and two males. Thus, it would appear that the editorial writer's attempt at a female-male confrontation on the issue of committee representation was an emotional appeal with no foundation in fact.

Fourth, this time in partial support, the editorial writer makes a number of good points in the list of suggestions for saving money in the overall program. My caution here is that consideration and application of the proposals must be carefully done. The principles suggested by the proposals are reasonably good ones but any attempt to set hard and fast rules on all aspects of athletics and recreation is unrealistic. Some flexibility is a necessity.

Fifth, I must comment on the statement that "none should reap benefits by being considered by this council (the U.C.A.) to be a superior team resulting in unrealistically large sums of money being allocated to it, with the sole purpose of increasing player comforts." With the decrease in real purchasing power of the overall athletic and recreation budget during the last five years it would seem safe to conclude that most, if not all, of any slack (if it existed) has been squeezed out.

There are numerous other points in the editorial which I feel are misleading and rather unfortunate. Hopefully, the inconsistencies and errors that I have pointed out will cause readers of the Journal, when thinking back over the rhetoric and realize that the overall athletic and recreation budget is inadequate. Unfortunately the dropping of three popular second teams from further competition is likely to be only the beginning of drastic future cuts in all areas of what until now has been one of the most extensive and well-utilized athletic and recreation programs in North American Universities.

In closing, let me quote from the editorial a statement with which I agree in full: "What is needed is a very serious effort of objective look at the entire program." However, I will add, a look not only as far as budgets go but also in terms of the support that the Queen's Community-Students, Faculty, Staff and Alumni want to give it. The concern felt by the editorial writer is appreciated and understood since our athletic and recreation program is an integral part of the life of each Queen's person. No doubt, the U.C.A. will be giving the current problems more serious thought and attempts will be made to maintain and consolidate the present programs.

Yours truly,

William E. Miklas
Alumni Representative to the Men's Intercollegiate Committee Member, University Council on Athletics

Save intermeds.

Dear Editor,

Is dropping the Women's Intermediate Intercollegiate teams really necessary? I think not. Here are some facts which did not come to light in the article on the '75-'76 U.C.A. (University Council on Athletics) budget which appeared in the Journal on Friday March 21, 1975.

Fact - during the 1974-75 season both Men's and Women's Intercollegiate Committees were responsible for 21 teams a piece. Fact - the women's intercollegiate program, although operating the same number of teams, is run on less than one half of the Men's Intercollegiate budget.

I agree that it takes more money to run the Men's Intercollegiate Program - football teams do cost more than Synchro teams. But the Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Committee is not asking for equalization with the Men's Budget, only for the less than $5,000 needed to maintain their '75-'76 program.

Inequality does come in with 6.3 percent across the board budget increase for all 5 Committees of the U.C.A. Thus when the WIAC receives a $2,912 increase the MIAC receives $6,395. It is easy to see how the rich are getting richer.

As Mr. Heim Lillies pointed out in his letter to the Editor in the Journal of Thursday March 27th, the MIAC were by their first Budgetary proposal. This they trimmed to $400 - a difference of $11,000 with no change in policy. The WIAC found ways to trim a $9,963 budget deficit to less than $5,000. The WIAC will not be able to run their current program with this deficit, and the resulting change in policy is to cut the Intermediate Basketball.

Field Hockey and Volleyball Teams.

Inequality is also evident in policies of the MIAC and the WIAC budgetary expenditures. Women's Intercollegiate Athletics have been run on a shoe string for several seasons now and only through very efficient budgeting have they managed to make ends meet so far.

Men's Intercollegiate Athletics have money to throw away. Soccer, Rugby and Football receive generous subsidization on paid for footwear - given to the players). Women do not.

All players on football and men's track teams (to mention only two) receive free training table meals. Only those women athletes in residence, and who miss the evening meal due to practise scheduling are given benefit of the training table. Men's teams are more than generous with accommodation and meals on away trips. For example the Football team, when playing Saturday afternoon in Ottawa, is bused to Ottawa Friday, accommodated Friday and Saturday nights and bused back on Sunday. Players on all men's teams are given a certain amount of cash to pay for each days meals on trips, regardless of whether this money is spent on food or not. Meanwhile the women's teams are sharing buses with other Universities where possible or getting up at 6:00am to drive themselves to competitions in vans.

At meals the women's team managers announce a ceiling figure of how much the team can afford to pay per player. Any money not spent is returned to the Budget.

Thus when the Women's Intercollegiate budget is short $5,000, it is short.

Men's intercollegiate doctored $400 on their proposed budget are only slightly inconvenienced in that they will not be able to make such generous handouts in some areas perhaps. As was mentioned in the last UCA meeting, any trimmings of MIAC budget have been made without any changes in policy.

The UCA is not totally blind to the state of affairs. A committee has been established to look into budgetary spending by the five UCA subcommittees (WIC, BEWS, Rec Services, WIAC and MIAC). This committee will meet over the summer and perhaps some changes will be made next year - for the '76-'77 budget. By then it will be too late - Women's Intermediate Teams will be a thing of the past.

49 Athletes at Queen's are being robbed of a chance to participate. And what hurts more is that Queen's is saying "Good-bye" to winning teams. Intermediate Field Hockey and Intermediate Basketball placed second in final league standings this year; Intermediate Volleyball was the OWIAA champion this year.

Something must be done now to save the Women's Intermediate Teams. I am sure that I speak on behalf of a majority of Queen's Women Intercollegiate Athletes in recommending that the WIAC Intercollegiate Athletes in recommending that the WIAC withdraw from the '75-'76 Colour Night Banquet in order to finance the Intermediate Teams while the UCA re-examines its budgetary allocations. Women's Intermediate Teams can and must be saved!!

deFUNct club

Dear Editor,

At last Thursday evening's AMS meeting the charter of the Fun Club was revoked because of non-payment of a 'loan' of some $500, made to the Fun Club a year ago. We, the executive members of the club would like to explain to the campus at large what the Fun Club was, and why and how it was formed.

The Fun Club was formed early in the fall of 1971 by a small number of first year students. It began as a bit of a joke, something to do on a mild autumn evening during those first euphoric days in the beginning of an undergraduate career at Queen's. A flyer advertising Clubs night said "come and join a club, or start one". These students decided to set up a table there in Grant Hall, at Clubs Night, promoting the notion of a club formed to promote fun, and dedicated to the proposition that all men were created equally in the eyes of Fun.

Prospective members were asked to list their favourite fun activities and to report how many hours of fun they average a day (including eating and sleeping.)

By the end of the evening 324 names had been collected! (However it should be noted that the list was started at 283). The AMS Clubs Manager came around and offered to give the club an official charter, if the people who started it would write a constitution and name an executive. A take or two later this was accomplished and soon thereafter the Fun Club became an officially sanctioned AMS club, and was granted $200. That's right folks, 200 green ones, unasked for, out of the blue.

What started as a joke had become a reality. Once the club had the money, it had a serious obligation to the student's of Queen's University to spend that money. By hard, but fun, work and diligence, the Fun Club managed not only to spend all its money, but to go into debt to the tune of about $500. Of course, it took three years to do. During that time the Fun Club's membership ranks grew to over 1300 - making it by far the largest club on campus. Events were held regularly during this time, always organized by those same few who started the club the autumn night in 1971. Of course, more good people came along and gave invaluable help, but at the core were some few.

At the first of two dances held in Grant Hall the club set a new record, since broken for amount of beer sold in one night. Halloween Rants were held in the Queen's pub (we just rented the damn place for the night, served straight from the bar). By the way, guess what famous AMS president came dressed as Richard Nixon? At one time the club rented the Elfrond College cafeteria and threw a gigantic chili dinner festival. A square dance with a real country band with a fiddler and caller, was held one night in Wallace Hall. We called it the Fun Club and we damn well did fun things that no one else has ever done around here. The Bugle, the Fun Club newspaper sprung up briefly among much controversy. The present campus printing service wouldn't have come into being were it not for the Fun Club. One Fun Club member went on to become AMS president and others have sat on Outer Council. Original silkscreened t-shirts were created every year for four years. These shirts have been worn all over Europe and North America, even in San Diego, California.

One cannot really blame the AMS for revoking the Fun Club charter. The organization of the AMS is such that it can not be expected to understand the Fun Club, let alone have fun themselves. For the people involved in the Fun Club from October 1, 1971 till Good Friday 1975, there is no regret, only good memories of jive times. A splendid time was had by all.

It's been fun,

Now... more than ever the RCMP offers a rewarding career

If you've ever considered a career in law enforcement, now's the time to talk to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The opportunities have never been greater.

For instance, the RCMP is accepting applications from both men and women, married and single. And the salary scale has increased considerably. It starts at $10,794 per year ($207 weekly) with regular increases to $14,150 ($272 weekly) in the first four years.

If accepted as a member of the Force, you'll receive intensive training in all aspects of police work such as law, investigation, first aid and community relations. Then you'll be posted to a detachment where there's every chance to put your knowledge and talents to work, to earn promotion and, equally important, be proud of what you're doing for yourself and for Canada as a member of one of the finest police forces in the world.

So if you're a Canadian citizen 18 or over and in good physical condition, think about a career with the RCMP.

Call or write your nearest office or use the coupon. We'd like to tell you more.

Seeds...

Every work of imaginative literature is based upon some deeply felt, if not fully or even partially conscious, assumption about what can, or just possibly does, constitute the ground of experience itself.

...literature can, by quickening our sense of possibility and complicating our imagination of good and ill, at least help to make us a little more human.

thanks to all contributors it is impossible for this concept to survive without contributions. There is quite a bit of poetry that I'd like to have published, but there you are. I was disappointed that no one submitted any prose works, but there you are again. Special thanks to the guys of 29 Alcorn make sure Rob doesn't forget what is which and which is what.

Journeys

I
We were shown a sign and were certain but now we ask questions

Here in the cold with thin air in our heads and trails of snow reaching down the mountains towards us

We were shown a sign and we came crossing mountains and desert with camel and mule
all our riches behind us into a strange land with no signposts

Erecting only our own signs being able to say as we looked cautiously over our shoulders

There we have been
and there

And eventually perhaps arriving just in time or just too late

We are strangers in a land with no roads

hands frozen by wet ropes

toothless and with no hair

II
The earth lies still shapes rise on air out of the desert

This is a land full of gods in rock and sand and dry rivers

Into this we came new friends behind us moving together for security past nomads huddled in tents against the fearful earth

Into this we came with old ideas with no words that could stand the strain and once stopping by the road perhaps for lunch lean walked back down the valley filled with windblown rock and weeds silence exploding against the sky and mountains and set two stones together upright

Here in the cold with thin air in our heads

leaving an inscription like some old Cro Magnon walking back into the caves further than any before and fumbling with his memory in the dark paints a magical skeleton for a hidden epitaph

In a land full of gods searching for words as we travel across the still earth leaving signposts for no one but ourselves

looking over our shoulders as we move away and saying
There we have been
and there

(Khandahar, Afghanistan, 1973)

Looking Back

I walk a razor's edge between pain and joy trying to find reason buried between visions of ladies past and present rooms in my house to which I sometimes return just to admire the colours and recall the unspoken things lovers and friends never have to say after goodbye and wonder that in all we said rooms and I never was there mention of the day after tomorrow.

Soft Sounds

Alone we sit
Just the two of us
Humming the ninth just ever so softly
And the birds then sit, like an orchestra waiting for a conductor
but he is detained, and not being able to hear a sound he drowns in our telepathic symphony

The Shadow of Akbar

"The King hath in Agra and Fatehpur Sikri 100 Elephants, 30,000 horses, 1,400 tame deer, 800 concubines and such other store of leopards, tiger, buffaloes, cocks and hawks that it is very strange to see."

The green backed humming bird flutters against the wall

The loud songed parakeet spreads across the sky

If you come
If you follow the singing bird she will show you places beyond the sound of feet and voices

If you follow over broken rocks over the walls full of children
she will show you the secret halls where lived
The Keeper of the Elephants

To places where pillars make empty spaces flow in harmony into rooms without walls where inland breezes always blow

And if you follow the singing bird or if you choose the path without a guide
only the sun behind you you will find Akbar -
- builder of all this - alone in his garden beneath a tree on each side a pool of water lilies

sandalwood burns hidden

Come follow the parakeet she will show all this the empty spaces
the rooms without walls and she will show you Akbar weeping for his life beneath the halls of pillars beside the water lily pond

essay on earthworms

dreams are dreams where earthworms devour earthworms tearing flesh and swallowing nerve ends consuming intelligence as though it were bread sipping down a light apertif we were settled there but left before we realized that we never wanted to leave this foreign planet we were settled and had bought a seven day clock but it is unwound now though its pendulum
iterates toward infinity and still there are those who have not learned they cry and sweat that from yeats' travelling book shelley has copied down the west wind sad eyed ladies good night it is time desolation is found in the use of the mind and only there but still we have boarded our air rocketspace vessel and with legs straddled on the moons we'll stare down the sun
the planet lies beneath where earthworms dangle from the rigging like a professor who can only scratch his head give him resdan and let him fly in the dull living sleep contemplating the passage of earth and along the campus corridors
I read the poems
the students write about trees and water and home and love and limestone sentiment in the crowded forest
I have a fear that the hermit sits alone has the world not heard that arcady is dead and cambridge is not far behind

Yestertime

it spreads
a feeling from sometime a place not long ago.
i hold it in my arms, my eyes not looking meltingness.
quietness.
a rainbow smile. a sparkling drop of yestertime runs down your cheek, a song which touches gently on the ear a long lost rhyme from yestertime.

a deepness below which i can not see,
a feeling from which no thought can place,
no want of time, no sense of loss.

from somewhere far beyond a wand is swept across our lives, its magic dust sprinkled gently down shielding us from all else and protects yestertime from now, holding together what broke away before a sweeping sadness grasps at the reigns and pulls away what can not be warding us with what has to be.

oh from beyond the feelings which bind nothing together or hold the same apart comes the words drifting closer the thoughts of yestertime.

Imagine

Imagine this:
A hotel in Europe,
Where people leave their shoes
In the corridors to be cleaned,
And late at night you, wanting to know better,
Try each pair on, walking in them

They don't fit well
But you get the feeling don't you?

the hiss constant

the hiss of the steam machine in the cafeteria roars blotting out all sound and leaving me
among filled tables alone
so much noise that there is quiet among the brown hiss but suddenly the steam machine is silent and anxious individual chatter races back - a girl laughs there, a man strums a guitar here, he sips his coffee, she gushes her cigarette smoke, a tied dog whimpers, a harmonica cries off-tune, a glass crashes on the floor, the door opens, a draft rushes in, a child blats the cleaning woman drops her red sponge and o my god is just living blood dimmed chaos

Woman at a Tram Stop: Josef Stadter Strasse, Vienna

With the majesty of old kingdoms, the stillness of this lithe woman standing, hands enfolded, arch-backed,
at a tram stop on Josef Stadter Strasse.

Her orange coat, just flecked with dust or soot, her hair, black, cut to a slash, curves up and out

Under the Roman nose, the mouth, face-widening, cheek-filling,
lips full, pinkish with little creases.

People. They move about her.
They do not talk, walk fast,
Shuffle on leg splinters.

Erect, waiting
Her white dress hangs long, still.

Follow her gaze: there the railway bridge, a train shooting, clanging above the Mercedes traffic, tires on cobblestones.

Turning her head for the tram, she sees black sleighs piled with furs moving among little parades of gaudy, mustached soldiers.

Her face moves down, slowly
She turns, walks toward the Maria Treu-Kirche

1912

Of anxious, worried women, weary women at small tables beside windows, drab-curtained, there is a redolence, faint, faint hint of burned wax

Burned wax, scratched with a dulled, buffed fingernail exhales fragile lemon, yellow smells distant of old, old, books, crumpled leaves pressed in, flaking

Or of hair, wisped along jaw bones, idle swooping of grace, tiny filaments, anesthetic nerve ends.

The candle is low, yes.
The eyes half open on trees stiff, freezing branches of November, and the inner creak, deep,
down deep at the base, the wide stasis, snaps: the centre is shifted,
the cells, fibrant, emit weary stench of carbon.

Holy Ghosts

i
They are still alive
We can not kill them,
although some of us try,
and a few of us think we succeed
Or rather, they refuse to be killed, to succumb to even the most pagan bludgeon, or the most outrageous rhythm

ii
They were created somehow,
where and when, not by men,
but through men: in the sudden silences, in the reverence of a moment when storms began or passed by, coming into sight of another man, on another hill.

iii
Chaucer never went to India, but "The Pardoner's Tale" exists in Indian Legend Chaucer is dead (so are Beethoven, Handel and Caesar, by the way) but poets still give their best moving readings and, in addition to fee, sell books after.

iv
They are still alive; have undergone many stonings,
many resurrections

v
You can talk or write about wind:
there's a god for that, all you have to do is look up.

vi
There's a god for thunder, for January, for Love (Cama, in India) for stone, for Easter, for France, for every colour and every slow sigh together.

vii
Tiny dancing demons, gleeful, still abide in the high niches of medieval cathedrals: you can't see them, but they're there; the artist who crafted them knows they are part of the structure. You can go inside and hear Latin words, echoes from men who shook hearts, shook souls.

viii
It does not matter if I should now tell you that I wrote this poem in the nude, that would only remind you of Layton, because it seems he writes all his poems that way

ix
It matters if you see Prufrock in every 20th century downtown restaurant the women still come and go, leaving poems and beauty for men to record and everyone to read one night, alone, with a single light and last cigarette, and smile without knowing (Yeats puts his wine glass on the floor, pulls himself up out of the ragged chair to tell you once more about the Maude and Helen you remember).

x
The dead are alive. Literature is Christian.

xi
Villon is dead. So are all his whores
But not whores.

xii
Keats and Tennyson, among others, celebrated Ste. Agnes Eve: virgins still exist, a combination of Rossetti's "The Annunciation" and Burne-Jones' "The Building of the Brazen Tower"

xiii
Scholars sit in tiny rooms lined with cabinet and book, trying to figure out Joyce and Eliot, to get them down, to know the proof that gods never die, that shirts on a line are spiritual crucifixions, that saints exist it only for death.

xiv
The ones who insist on the living of Death (Christina Rossetti, Swinburne and Woolf, for example) touch deep at a core,
at a pinch of dust

xv
In Baudelaire and Morris cities, in Rimbaud rooms, there lies a sweat and soot that Dante knew

Great myths of our time

by Tony Davis
Recent public fears of becoming brainwashed by some form of "international advertising conspiracy" has prompted the Canadian Radio and Television Corporation (CRTC) to issue some form of legal amendments to cover the problem. But where did "the problem" come from?

Professor W. B. Key, a professor of journalism at the University of Western Ontario, had published a book called "Subliminal Seduction." Key envisaged that advertisers were implanting subliminal messages in the media in order to program buying needs. This "media rape", as he describes it, is "immoral and unethical".

Robert Oliver, President of the Canadian Advertising Board, is in full accord with agreeing that subliminal advertising is unethical -- if it was in use. Oliver refutes Key's notions that the advertising industry is dealing in such methods. Oliver calls subliminal advertising, "the greatest nonissue of our time."

The most famous case of subliminal advertising was that of a New Jersey movie theatre in the mid-fifties which projected the image "Drink Coca-Cola" and "Buy Popcorn". Accordingly, sales were supposed to have gone up at the theatre's concession stand. When asked to release their data on the study, the Subliminal Projection Co. refused to do so. This famous New Jersey test case has tended to become mythologised over the years.

Subliminal perception is still in its infancy as far as research goes, and its actual potential unknown. Presently, this kind of advertising is unmarketable and unprofitable. Although the stimulus may obtain the intended response, it is unknown whether or not there will be increases in the purchases of the desired product. Or, as Oliver has put it: "In such an environment do we seriously imagine buried words or even ice cube copulation are going to turn people on?"

The public reaction to the issue of subliminal advertising has been indeed interesting. A number of Women's Liberation Movements have pounced upon Dr. Key's revelations, "and subconsciously transmitting sexist beliefs."

The Kingston Whig-Standard, in an editorial of Saturday March 15, came out with an incredible reactionary conclusion: "In fact, its wise to eliminate this sinister science while it's still in its infancy. All that we really need to know about it is that we don't want it."

Queen's School of Business Professors, Stephen Arnold and James Barnes, whose report was received by the CRTC on March 11, stated recently in an interview that legislation would not be enforced or affected by private biases. Ambiguous stimulus cannot be perceived in a way to program an individual to do or buy such-and-such. "Such messages might be capable of making a viewer thirsty, but may not make him drink."

A study in the magazine "American Psychologist" in 1958 pointed out the variety of public reactions to the phenomenon of subliminal advertising: "Rarely does a day pass without a statement in the public press relating to the Utopian promise or the 1984 threat of the technique." It is the threat motif that is in force today.

Rather than an expose, Professors Arnold and Barnes see Key's book as a witch-hunt. Such was Robert Oliver's viewpoint when he stated that it "reminds me of Salem and witchcraft." And the advertising industry is to be burned at the stake to appease Key with his notions of "puritanical guilt" towards sex.

Dr. Key has successfully marketed a product -- his book, but it is doubtful that he knows his material. "Subliminal Seduction" is incredibly devoid of factual material, just nebulous studies conducted by the author. Key's motives are questionable. Robert Oliver states "I regard Dr. Key's book as a blatant attempt to capitalize on our schizophrenic attitudes towards sex and I think he has done advertising and the liberation movement (women's) a profound disservice."

The most recently published authoritative work on the subject is that of N. F. Dixon's: "Subliminal Perception: The Nature of a Controversy." This work, steeped in scientific study illustrates the complexities of the problem, and his conclusion is most revealing: "So deeply rooted is this distaste for the idea of external unperceived control (particularly in a culture which sets the goal of personal freedom above all else) that it is understandable that there should have been so many attempts to cast doubts on the validity of this intriguing phenomenon which has continued to confront, and in some cases affront, twentieth century psychologists."

It is time for the myth to be exploded

Elrond Executive Action

Student claims human rights denied

by Norman Maynard

On Thursday March 27, Roger Harper was asked to stop selling the newspaper Labor Challenge inside the doors of Elrond College. Harper is a member of Elrond and had, he claimed, been selling his newspaper there all term. This action stemmed from a vote taken by the Elrond College Council during their last meeting of the term and precipitated a series of events leading to Roger's saying: "I am protesting the deprivation of my fundamental human rights and urge the students of Queen's not to allow this issue to go by the board. If the students of Queen's allow the prohibition of the sale of Labor Challenge within Elrond, they are doing nothing less than sanctioning, through tacit acceptance, the said deprivation of my rights."

Mr. Harper was asked to stop selling Labor Challenge by Doug Belanger, the ninth floor east representative who sits on the Elrond College Council. In an interview with the Journal on Monday, March 31, Mr. Belanger stated that previous to the Wednesday meeting of the Council, Elrond members had complained to him about Mr. Harper's methods of sale. Belanger then told the Journal that the matter was brought up during the Wednesday council meeting under the agenda heading of "other business". Mr. Harper was invited to this meeting Belanger said because the meetings were open to all Elrond members. Posters had been up for two days announcing the Wednesday meeting. Roger was not personally invited to the meeting, Mr. Belanger said. While Harper's interests were being discussed at the meeting (he was personally mentioned) the poster made no reference either to soliciting in general or to Harper's particular situation. Mr. Belanger told the Journal.

Mr. Belanger stopped Mr. Harper from selling his newspaper as a result of the Council's vote reinforcing the ban on "soliciting". Belanger stated that he was authorized as "spokesman" for the Committee. Concerning the entire Harper incident Belanger remarked: "The laws of the College are explicit and Roger was dealt with according to those laws." He then cited a section of Elrond's Conditions of Membership in Residency, "Condition A" which read "member will not behave in any fashion that will unreasonably interfere with the enjoyment of other occupants or will annoy them by unreasonable noise or otherwise." Regulations of the College, clause "H" reading "The residence will not be used or permitted to be used without the written consent of Elrond for any purpose other than residential chambers" was also felt to be relevant by Mr. Belanger. By signing his lease, Belanger told the Journal, Harper agreed to the above stipulations. Like all laws, Belanger said they are open to interpretation.

When queried concerning Harper's "human rights" Belanger said he was "not at liberty to discuss human rights". He went on: "I'm not to sit in judgment of the rights - a court of law is."

Harper contends that he is "not out to write laws - simply to get a fair interpretation". He does not feel that selling a newspaper is simply soliciting. Newspapers are a form of communication he told the Journal during a Sunday, March 30 interview, and because of this, he is being denied the right of freedom of speech or expression.

This right, Harper claims, was not denied to the Toronto Globe and Mail. Much of his "human rights" challenge stems back to his claim concerning the canvassing for subscriptions by the Globe in September. This issue is so important to Harper that he has circulated a petition, with a preamble entitled "End the Ban on Labor Challenge". In starting the petition, Harper views himself as acting "in the spirit of the co-operative" and felt that he should see whether the people of Elrond were annoyed by his selling of Labor Challenge. As of Monday evening, 143 members of the College have signed the petition.

Bill Young, President of Elrond College and Chairman of its Board of Directors, denies that the Globe and Mail was allowed to solicit in Elrond. They asked for official permission to do so and this was denied, he claimed.

Mr. Young stated during a Monday March 31 interview that the "only question is whether or not Roger is in a different position, being a member of the College." He feels that any other special circumstances, other than above, do not enter into the matter. Harper was "soliciting" Young feels. As an individual member of Elrond, Young would not comment concerning Harper's "human rights".

Young then went on to outline the procedure of appeal that are available to Harper should he contest the Elrond council's decision. Harper should first request a hearing for his case with the Judicial Committee at Elrond. Young feels that it will take approximately one week for the Judicial Committee to make a report to the Board of Directors. "Most likely the Judicial Committee reports will be accepted by the Board," Young said. "The mechanics," said Young "clearly falls in the lap of the Judicial Committee."

The Judicial Committee met only when an Elrond Council decision is appealed but the Board has scheduled meetings Young said. The next meeting will be on Thursday, April 3 and the date of the following meeting is not known, he continued. Young guesses that it will be held two weeks following the 3rd.

The April 3 meeting is under the one week estimate offered by Young and he "doubts" Harper's case will be examined.

Under the Elrond by-laws,

Harper can then further appeal the Board of Directors decision by obtaining a petition calling for a General Meeting of the members of Elrond, Young told the Journal. This petition would require signing by two-thirds of the members of Elrond, he said.

Ernie Durling is a member of the Judicial Committee. In a telephone conversation with the reporter on March 30, 1975, Durling agreed with Young's time estimate concerning the Judicial Committee report. He felt however, that the responsibility lies in the lap of the Board of Directors. The Judicial Committee's function "was simply to submit reports."

Time is of critical importance in this issue as it happens at the end of the year Harper has sent in his appeal to the Judicial Committee as of April 1. The Judicial Committee should submit their report to the Board of Directors by April 7, Young and Durling estimate; the day Harper receives his last issue of Labor Challenge. The Board meeting that Young feels will probably handle the Harper situation will, he guesses, be on April 17. Harper is finished his last exam on the 19th.

The Elrond Executive also recognizes that time is important. Harper was interviewed

Sunday afternoon, April 30. On Sunday evening, Young wrote him a letter stating that to sell his paper all he had to do was put up a sign advertising the sale of Labor Challenge. This would not constitute soliciting. Harper, however, wants to appeal the Elrond Council's decision.

Gordon Hobbs is the Chairman of the Elrond College Education Committee. Mr. Hobbs lent the use of the Committee's duplicating machine to Harper to enable him to make his petition available to the members of Elrond. This was done to support Harper's freedom of expression as Hobbs sees the matter. Hobbs told the Journal during an afternoon interview on March 30, that the prohibition did not infringe upon Harper's freedom. Hobbs stated that Harper could always sell on the street. When asked if Harper would have his freedom of expression curtailed by Elrond if he was arrested on the street, Hobbs replied "No, that's a city matter." Hobbs stated concerning Harper's "rights", "Actual preservation of his freedom of expression would have entailed due notification of the intention to discuss his case. Roger's interests would have been more fairly represented had he been invited to the meeting". The Education Committee Chairman then, feels that Harper was dealt with reasonably fairly despite the fact that Harper was not given "due notification of the intention to discuss his case." Hobbs was not present during the Elrond Council's voting on this matter.

There is a chance that Harper would be arrested if he street-solicited as Hobbs suggested. During a telephone conversation with the Journal, Sergeant Wiskin of the Kingston City Police stated that the vendor may "hold the newspaper but he cannot 'harass' citizens". Harassment depends upon the individual circumstances. The members of Elrond who complained of harassment to Mr. Belanger, may later complain to the police. Harper then could be arrested if he follows Hobbs' advice.

Harper has chosen, however, to appeal the Elrond Council's decision. It should be interesting to follow this case through to its conclusion. It will also be difficult. The minutes of the Wednesday Elrond College Council's meeting have not been ratified. The minutes will not be published until they are ratified, which will take place at the next meeting of the Council. The Council's meeting on Wednesday was the last of the term.

Caution. Do not mix.

A great many people are surprised to learn that they can become noticeably, even seriously, intoxicated on only one drink if they have recently taken certain types of medication.

The drugs to be particularly careful about are tranquilizers, antihistamines, amphetamines and barbiturates.

If you have taken both drugs and alcohol, it can be exceedingly dangerous to attempt to drive a car or other vehicle.

We don't want to sound preachy, but we have always believed that the right way to enjoy any beverage alcohol product is in moderation. Mixed with drugs, however, even moderate drinking is out of place.

If you suspect the medication you're taking is not compatible with beverage alcohol, you would be wise to consult your doctor, your pharmacist, or the government Department of Health.

Sandra Aitken and her dance company

the company

This is our first year together. We're trying to establish the company as a permanent feature of the cultural scene. Unfortunately, by the time we've learned to work well as a team, most of the dancers will graduate, and we will have to begin again. But the process is important, as well as the product.

on the school of PHE

The School of Physical and Health Education, where I teach modern dance, is trying to expand the program, but it's a puzzle in terms of curriculum: most of the students are looking for ways in which to use or assimilate dance training into sports. Which is possible, but not necessarily the purpose of the exercise. Dance is a self-contained discipline, but naturally co-ordination, timing, and grace are worth developing in any line of work.

alan mann

choreography

The greatest difficulty in choreographing dance routines is avoiding repetitions. One's personal style can become limited and stagnant. There are no formulas for avoiding stagnation, but keeping an open mind, and being willing to experiment are prerequisites. Teaching can be deadly if some creative outlet is not available. That's where the company plays an important role. It forces you out of the mold. Too often a teacher is tempted to fall back on time-tested methods and become lazy with regard to his own development. Teaching should be a learning process, a growth.

the music

Finding music is difficult. Live performers and original compositions are always preferable, but so often time and money don't permit. This show is about half and half—some recorded music, some live, some begged, some borrowed, and some stolen compositions. It is not a bad percentage, as dance shows go.

the show

There were two reasons for the variety show—a floor show as we've started to call it. One factor was simply the freedom—there were things I've wanted to do for a long time, such as tap, that didn't seem to fit into a modern format. A modern program generally has a theme that rules out varying styles of dance. But a floor show is open season—anything goes.

the show

This show is really designed to give the company a chance to discover what a performance is. We've tackled some risky styles: tap is very difficult to learn, and we've had to learn it in less than a month. But performance pressure helps to speed the learning process, so things are moving fairly quickly.

Most of what we do in this show is not technically 'modern dance', which was an invention of the twenties. We're mixing styles: tap, a narration of forties jazz, and some original movements which might be termed contemporary. I have my own personal style, but it draws on everything I've ever learned.

dancing

Dancing is its own reward. A dancer should get at least as much out of a performance as the audience. Anyone who dances entirely for someone else is cheating both parties out of an important experience.

modern dance

I have been dancing for 20 years, and during those years I have been developing a style of my own which could be called modern dance, but which differs from 'modern', which is Martha Graham's invention. Since then inception of the 'modern' style, the proliferation of styles based on similar principles has confused the issue—'modern dance' is an unfortunate term, because the true 'modern' is forty years old. Each choreographer will inevitably come up with a personal approach. The only link with modern dance is the relaxation of strict rules of movement. For instance—modern dance allowed the back to be bent for the first time; bare feet made their first legitimate appearance. It isn't that the technique became easier—simply less rigid. There is a different sort of formality in modern dance—sloppy is still sloppy.

dance

Dance has to be emotionally appealing—it has to communicate something, even if it's just a feeling. A lot of modern dance is too intellectual and symbolic; we're trying to break away from that and develop a form that more nearly captures the original flavour—group participation in an aesthetically structured emotional experience.

We're always looking for significance in forms, not just pure form. If we don't actually tell a story, which we often do, we try to give the audience something to grasp, an experience that is meaningful as well as unusual, emotional as well as intellectual.

★★★★★★★★★ 'Spot the Stars'

by Sandra Bernstein

"Ladies and Gentlemen, good evening, and welcome to the Capitol Theatre, where once again it's time to play 'Spot the Stars'!! Tonight's contestants, our previous champions from 'Towering Inferno' and 'Airport '75' have just watched Murder on the Orient Express, in which they have not only correctly identified John Gielgud, Sean Connery, Albert Finney, Ingrid Bergman, Tony Perkins, Lauren Bacall, Richard Widmark, Michael York and Vanessa Redgrave, among others, but have also had to guess 'Who done it?'.

All right, maybe I am just sore because I spent the whole evening trying to figure out which one was Fred Astaire, only to be told at the end that he was in Towering Inferno. It does seem, however, as if Director Sidney Lumet (The Pawnbroker, View from the Bridge) has helped designer Tony Walton recreate the opulence of a first-class carriage on a 1935 Orient Express, by decorating it with stars. Some, like Jacqueline Bisset, are only required to sit and sip in the back-lit elegance.

More memorable are the performances of Gielgud as a butler and Rachel Roberts as an ancient, black-feathered Russian countess, as well as the idiosyncrasies of detective Hercule Poirot (played by an overly-made-up Albert Finney). Finney could not have found a role further from that of Tom Jones than this of the stout, slouching, aging Belgian with his carefully-waxed moustache. His performance is highly stylized, overacted perhaps, although Agatha Christie's Poirot is a bit of a ham himself. Finney dominates the action but not the screen, a quality of his acting which here accords with Lumet's apparently egalitarian casting.

Also worthy of note is the work of cinematographer Unsworth, as well as the costumes and the design.

Lumet's direction is generally overindulgent. Perhaps his most successful scene is the climactic enacting of Poirot's reconstruction of the murder, which Lumet manages to instill with some of the restraint and power of a Greek tragedy. Balancing this, however, are a number of nuisances. There are problems with languages: an 'Italian' speaks bad Italian; the American accents are grotesque; and a German maid speaks the German of an aristocrat. Also in his efforts to prevent audience claustrophobia, create cheap dramatic effects, and establish the sets as being part of a moving train, Lumet gives us so many cuts to the exterior of the train that the film begins to look like an industrial documentary a la A Place to Stand—until, to the relief of us all, the train gets stuck in a snow bank half way through. Even then, the polite snowplough reserves its rescue until Poirot has just solved the case.

These devices, and others obviously intended to manipulate us into a state of suspense or excitement, fail to turn 'Orient Express' into a thriller. It is, however, an entertaining, visually attractive film which will hold your interest without complicating your life by provoking thought.

★★★★★★★★★ Typical thriller

by Shelley Ledger

Yes Virginia, there is a quasi-Canadian, horror flick named Black Christmas playing at the Capitol Theatre.

Black Christmas, is another project of the federally initiated and financed Canadian Film Development Corporation. The producers have aligned themselves with 'Famous Players' of American fame which probably accounts for a Canadian film with three of the four major roles assumed by foreign based actors. The C.F.D.C.'s decision to recognize this venture is obviously of a commercial nature, pandering to the continued brain and pocket drain of the masses. As such, it's cleaving a path of reasonable financial success.

This film is another living technological display of agonizing coincidental suspense, contrived personalities, bludgeoning terror and gore and mysteriously mischorded piano crescendos accompanied by myopic and possibly hungover camera motion. Bob Clark's directing is about as subtle as heavy breathing. And, unfortunately, his primary actors, notably Olivia Hussey, John Saxon and Keir Dullea rarely find their way out of that hyper-ventilated space. Margot Kidder's efforts are a little more noticeable though they suffer from a thinly disguised caricature by writer Ray Moore.

The secondary players claim any attention due. Of particular interest are Andre Martin of Toronto's Godspell production and Doug McGrath of Going Down the Road fame, who is one of Canada's finest underworked actors.

Generally, the story moves from unusual disappearances of breathless, young, co-eds, to unusual telephone calls to breathless, young, co-eds, to rather unpleasant but colourful murders of the same. A certain unbalanced mentality is suspected. One is never quite sure what form this mentality assumes; however all possibilities point to behind the cameras.

It is a gruesome, spintangling, pop-corn thriller. If you're either in the mood or a little up tight, be entertained, by Black Christmas promotional blurb, if by nothing else—'If this movie doesn't make your skin crawl, IT'S ON TOO TIGHT.'

Bawdy humour?

This week, in the studio theatre in Theology Hall, the Experimental Drama class is presenting two plays by Keith Johnstone, instructor of the course. The first of these is called Hiss. "Bits of what?" you ask. Well, Hiss is a series of skits tied together by the umbilical cord of a plot line which I would rather not give away. Suffice it to say that there are some absolutely hilarious moments in this first play—some moments of absolute insanity which promise to have many an audience member rolling on the floor. The play is at its best when it is funny—at times, when it attempts to be serious it falls flat. Many people might find the topics dealt with objectionable and some might find them moving.

Shot by an Elk, the second play, suffers from a very slow script with few tempo changes. Yet, there are potentially funny characters and moments. This script needs to be timed perfectly; it is insane and yet seems to be insane in a very calculated way. The jokes are what some people would call 'bawdy' humour, others 'bathroom' humour. If you like that sort of thing, you will certainly find Shot by an Elk interesting.

Mystery remains

Colette
by Margaret Crosland

by Nancy Bowes

Too often, the works of modern European novelists go unheeded by the reading public of North America. For many people a language barrier exists. Where books have been translated, many readers feel that something has been lost in the translation. Unfortunately, the loss is ours.

For those who feel that they might want an introduction to an author before plunging into his work, a biography is recommended. One such commendable biography is Colette by Margaret Crosland.

Crosland subtitled her work The Difficulty of Loving. This excellent phrase captures the essence of Colette's experience. The legends that surround this woman deal mainly with her love life. "She was considered a sexually extravagant person who reputedly conducted scandalous affairs with women as well as men."

Colette's earliest works, the Claudine series, were written under her husband's name. Colette soon wished to escape the pseudonym imposed by her husband, her first marriage, like the second ended in divorce. A prolific author, she produced seventy-three works, both fiction and non-fiction.

Crosland has succeeded in writing a life of Colette which sets right some of the legends and utterly destroys others, yet has not taken from her the mystery which properly shrouds France's greatest modern female novelist.

If you are an engineer, this chair could be yours.

This is where you could find yourself if you become a Maritime Engineering Officer in today's Canadian Armed Forces. The Master Engineering Control centre of one of our new DDH 280 Destroyers.

No boilers. No stokers. No sweat!

The power within these beautiful ships comes from jet turbine engines. The machinery that heats, cools, ventilates and provides water throughout these ships is the latest.

Maritime Engineering Officers on these ships work with some of the most sophisticated equipment in the world...with expertly trained men who are as proud of their work as they are of their ships.

If you're studying engineering, think about this Officer's job. It's a very special one. It could take you anywhere in the world!

Nemesis: Chapt I

By L.A.S.E.

In the beginning the Administration created the University. The University was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the fields; and the spirit of the Administration was moving over the face of the campus.

And the Administration said, "Let there be light upon these fields" and so there was a football team. And the Administration said "let there be light upon this campus" and so there was a gymnasium and an arena; and two basketball teams and two ice hockey teams. And the Administration saw that it was good.

Days passed and the Administration looked upon the fields, the arena and the gymnasium and said "let there be more teams in this University so that more athletes may benefit by these things and not only a few." And so, more teams were created for the enjoyment of Queen's men and women and the Administration saw that it was good.

And years went by and the teams flourished and athletics grew. And all of a sudden the boxing team fell into disfavoured with the Administration and the Administration with the stroke of a pen eliminated these athletes, saying "The Administration giveth and the Administration taketh away". Not a word was said.

And more years went by and Queen's athletes became well known around the province for having the best uniforms, eating the finest meals, and staying in the best hotels. And Queen's built a fine tradition around their athletic programs.

And all of a sudden the Men's Intermediate

Teams fell into disfavoured with the Administration and the Administration with the stroke of a pen eliminated these athletes representing the Queen's Intermediate Men's Teams saying, "The Administration giveth and the Administration taketh away". No word was spoken.

A couple of years passed and the other teams flourished. Queen's kept up its 'first class' tradition and all athletes enjoyed 'first class' treatment; except there seemed to be one last blemish. And so it passed that the Women's Intermediate teams fell into disfavoured with the Administration.

And then the Administration made a sacrificial offering of the Intermediate teams saying, "The Administration giveth and the Administration taketh away". And all of a sudden lightning flashed and thunder rolled and the heavens reverberated and voice thundered "Stop!!...you are not God!" And the Intermediate teams folded their arms and stood their ground and said, "Stop!!...you are not God!" and they sat down and wrote a peace treaty with peace offering and alternative ways of saving money in the budget.

The Administration, having recovered from shock, scornfully read the peace proposals and then sat down to discuss other affairs of state.

The Intermediate teams cried, "Stop!!...you are not God! We are the masters of our fate. We are the captains of our souls and we, the athletes, will choose our own destiny."

And they sat down to sharpen their sticks and prepare, with their chieftain, to do battle with the Administration.

Queen's Salutes Peter Watts

by L.A.S.E.

Anybody who has listened to a Queen's Gaelic Hockey Game, a Queen's Gaelic Football game or a sportscast on the CKWS radio or Television network any past weekend has heard the voice of our own famous (or infamous) whatever the case may be) broadcaster, Peter "1000" Watts.

The Sports department of the Queen's Journal would like to extend their hearty thanks for a fine job done in the past four years. We know that we are speaking on behalf of the entire Queen's community when we say "Best Wishes in future endeavours" to Peter.

Before coming to Queen's Watts graduated from Gordon Sinclair Public School and then from Frontenac High School. He has always lived in Kingston and (as far back as his mother can remember) has always been an avid sportsman, even though he has not actively participated in competitive sports himself.

He spent his first year at Queen's in the Commerce Program. He decided that it wasn't for him and took a year off to go to Toronto and take a Radio and TV Broadcasting course at the Career Academy. He then came back to Queen's where he has spent the last four years obtaining his Honours B.A. degree.

This past Colour Night (1975) he received a Special Plaque for outstanding participation and contributions towards athletics at Queen's.

His list of achievements are many and varied. In 1971-72 he was Manager of the Golden Gaels Hockey Team. In 1974-75 he was Manager of the Golden Gaels Football team.

For four years he was the broadcaster of all of the Gaels Football games over the CFRC radio station, and in his last year at Queen's he was the announcer of all of the Gaels Hockey games.

He played the role of Coach to a Bews Hockey Team in 1973-74 and coached an Interfaculty Hockey game in 1974-75. Last year he broadcast the Program "College Sport Today".

The Journal salutes him for his terrific work as Journal Sports Editor for two years. He leaves behind much to live up to. He also spent two years as Queen's Athletics Publicity Director.

Peter Watts will be graduating this spring and like many others, is not quite sure of just what the future holds in store for him. We know that it will be many years before this campus finds someone to fill his shoes. So on behalf of all those who knew him (and all those who never had the chance) we raise a toast to Peter Watts. "Oil Thigh" and Good Luck.

— Keith Bourns

West Germans to play V-Ball Gaels

The Queen's Women's Volleyball Team has received the honour of being selected, along with six other Volleyball teams from Eastern Canada, to meet the West German Team here at Queen's. All of the teams were recommended by the Canadian Volleyball Association on calibre of play.

The West German Team has placed among the top three in the Nationals for the last six years, with two of the players also members of the First National Team.

The German team has been touring Canada for the past six weeks and are now two-thirds of the way through their trip. The team is composed essentially of high school students with the addition of a few university students.

The Gaels invite you to join them for an evening of exciting volleyball action next Tuesday, April 8th at 8:00 pm in Ross Gym

The Hollow Men 1925 Mistah Kurtz - he dead.

The Hollow Men A penny for the Old Guy

I
We are the hollow men
We are the stuffed men
Leaning together
Headpiece filled with straw. Alas!
Our dried voices, when We whisper together
Are quiet and meaningless
As wind in dry grass
Or rats' feet over broken glass
In our dry cellar

Shape without form, shade without colour,
Paralysed force, gesture without motion;

Those who have crossed
With direct eyes, to death's other Kingdom
Remember us - if at all - not as lost
Violent souls, but only
As the hollow men
The stuffed men.

II
Eyes I dare not meet in dreams
In death's dream kingdom
These do not appear:
There, the eyes are Sunlight on a broken column
There, is a tree swinging
And voices are
In the wind's singing
More distant and more solemn
Than a fading star.

Let me be no nearer
In death's dream kingdom
Let me also wear
Such deliberate disguises
Rat's coat, crowskin, crossed staves
In a field
Behaving as the wind behaves
No nearer -

Not that final meeting
In the twilight kingdom

III
This is the dead land
This is the cactus land
Here the stone images
Are raised, here they receive
The supplication of a dead man's hand
Under the twinkle of a fading star.

It is like this
In death's other Kingdom
Walking alone
At the hour when we are Trembling with tenderness
Lips that would kiss
Form prayers to broken stone.

IV
The eyes are not here
There are no eyes here
In this valley of dying stars
In this hollow valley
This broken jaw of our lost kingdoms

In this last of meeting places
We grope together
And avoid speech
Gathered on this beach of the tumid river

Sightless, unless
The eyes reappear
As the perpetual star
Multi-foliate rose
Of death's twilight kingdom
The hope only
Of empty men.

HERE WE GO ROUND THE PRICKLY PEAR
PRICKLY PEAR, PRICKLY PEAR
HERE WE GO ROUND THE PRICKLY PEAR
AT FIVE O'CLOCK IN THE MORNING.

Between the idea
And the reality
Between the motion
And the act
Falls the shadow

FOR THINE IS THE KINGDOM

Between the conception
And the creation
Between the emotion
And the response
Falls the shadow

LIFE IS VERY LONG

Between the desire
And the spasm
Between the potency
And the existence
Between the essence
And the descent
Falls the shadow

FOR THINE IS THE KINGDOM

For Thine is Life is
For Thine is the

THIS IS THE WAY THE WORLD ENDS
THIS IS THE WAY THE WORLD ENDS
THIS IS THE WAY THE WORLD ENDS
NOT WITH A BANG BUT A WHIMPER.

Constraint Report: recommends larger classes, fee hike, but suggests enrolment be kept low

by Sarah Yarnell

The Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, containing recommendations which could greatly affect Queen's faculty, staff and students, will be presented to the university Senate this afternoon. Recommendations include raising tuition, charging students and staff more for services such as Bus-it so that university subsidies may be reduced or eliminated, and requesting that the AMS consider reduction or elimination of intercollegiate athletics so that $20 students now pay to the University Athletic Fee could be reallocated to another student service. Contrary to fears, surpassing Queen's projected enrolment ceiling of 10,000, and the dismissal of tenured faculty were not included in the recommendations.

Rapidly decreasing government support of Ontario universities led to the appointment of the Committee on Financial Constraint in December, 1974. According to the Report, the Committee attempted to answer questions such as: "How can costs be reduced in absolute or relative terms? How can this be done with least effect on the quantity and quality of the university's functions of teaching and learning, research and public service?"

"Academic staff," the Report states, "will have larger groups of students; students can anticipate less individual attention from hard-pressed staff, and will have to exercise greater individual initiative; staff and students can anticipate paying more for the various services they receive; and those members of the Queen's staff whose duties are not in the teaching function will inevitably find themselves spread more thinly as they try to maintain the level of service they have given students and staff in the past."

"We believe," the Report continues, "that the university system has entered a period of severe stringency, and the messages from the Ontario government and elsewhere clearly demand a process of cutting back that is much more than "trimming the fat". Whether this can be accomplished without permanent damage to the system will depend upon the spirit and the skill of the universities in meeting the present problems, and on the ultimate view of the role of universities taken by society." Universities have been criticized lately for not publicly stating their role in society, and for spending money in an allegedly loose way.

Reductions in academic staff are necessary, according to the Report, and so "the University must adopt a firm policy of non-replacement with exceptions only in those clear circumstances in which the reduction of staff complement would lead to the withdrawal of an essential program or service." Necessary hiring would take place by term appointment, "except in unusual circumstances, and at the most junior level suitable to the need." The Report recommends that a revision be undertaken of the Senate Statement on Academic Freedom and Tenure, "so that the necessary distinction may be made between academic freedom and tenure." Support staff should also be reduced, states the Report.

General library services must also be reduced, the Report recommends that saving could be achieved by reducing hours of service and by introducing a system of voluntary service to offset the reduced hours.

The Report recommended that the Principal establish an advisory group to assist him on a continuing basis with resource allocation and selection of constraints, because if the current government policy resulting in cutbacks is retained for many years, then expense reduction will have to continue through the years.

"In the years since 71-72, the increase in the value of the Basic Income Unit (BIU; unit value per student from which government grants are calculated) (2.0 percent, 3.4 percent and 7.1 percent respectively) did not keep up with the increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI) (4.8 percent, 7.6 percent and 10.9 percent). In those three years the CPI has risen by 25 percent, while the BIU value has risen by less than 13 percent. In real terms, basic operating income was reduced by 9.6 percent per BIU," states the Report.

These cutbacks in support led to the Queen's budget of 1975-76, with its deficit of $1.1 million. The Committee, when calculating the methods of eliminating the projected deficits up to 1980, labeled the University's problem "an unfair challenge". The Report recommends that the university try to convince the appropriate bodies and the general public of "the inequity of current policy and of the inevitable down-grading of the university system if the policy is continued."

"There could be a very significant trade-off from some of the drastic reductions recommended in this report if a way could be found to increase the net revenue from fees by say, $100 per student. (It goes without saying that any unilateral increase in fees would have to be accompanied by the provision of increased funds for scholarships and student aid in order to support those students who might otherwise be prevented from attending Queen's.)"

Summer Journal

Now that the annual staff turnover and financial crisis have been dealt with, the Summer Journal at last hits the streets. Weekly it will focus on what people are doing and thinking about in Kingston this summer...in the arts, in politics, in academics, in sports and recreation and in community involvement.

A great paper never just happens, however; it is the product of several individuals' suggestions and work. The quality and scope of the Summer Journal will depend on you; your ideas, time and effort are vital to its success. The Journal office is not closed to newcomers; its skeleton staff is not a clique. Contribute!

Outlook operating

On any Friday afternoon this summer a person stumbling into the normally business-like Student Volunteer Bureau offices on the first floor of the Students' Union will come face to face with a group of Outlook Campers and staff busily preparing for a weekend trip.

The weekend trips are an extension of the longer trips which have been conducted by Outlook since the summer of 1970. Outlook is a wilderness canoe-tripping camp operated by Queen's student volunteers which takes both underprivileged and delinquent teenagers from the Kingston community on ten day canoe trips. This year, under the directorship of Robb Fleming, they have introduced weekend trips for former campers and campers who find it necessary to work during the week.

Outlook maintains a base camp north of Bancroft, from which they stage trips into Algonquin Park. This summer Outlook will undertake a total of twelve ten day trips: four girls' and eight boys'. Two of the boys' trips will be made up of teenagers from the St. John's Training School in Uxbridge. On both the weekend and longer trips the camp tries to maintain a camper to staff ratio of 2:1.

The first trip of the year, a forty-two mile paddle and two mile portage through Big Gull Lake and parts of the Mississippi River was conducted last weekend. Thus from now until the end of August Camp Outlook will continue to offer, both staff and camper a fun-time and a meaningful experience in community living and sharing.

Although most staff positions are filled up, persons interested in working for Outlook should go up to the Outlook office on the first floor of the Union and talk to B.J. or Saima, the secretaries and chief bottle-washers. The offices are best found by using the University Ave. upper entrance to the Union.

Chaucer's Tales

by Alan Mann

According to Geoffrey Chaucer (1343-1400), it was "When that April with his showres soote Thanne longen folk to goon on pilgrimages" but it will be the last days of May when the Domino Theatre presents The Canterbury Tales, a musical adaptation of Chaucer's Medieval poetic satire.

The original Canterbury Tales had some thirty pilgrims travelling from the Tabard Inn in London to Canterbury Cathedral, the sight of the martyrdom of St. Thomas A. Becket. Their host and guide, Harry Bailey, the owner of the Inn, accompanies them and devises a contest to pass the time. Each pilgrim will tell a tale, and upon returning to the Inn, the best story teller will win a free meal.

It is this raciness and bawdiness that Nevill Coghill, Martin Starkie, Richard Hill, and John Hawkins took and adapted for the modern musical stage. All they really did was to update the words such as sich, like, and viage without destroying either the meaning or the rhyme of this epic poem, plus adding a few songs in keeping with the mood of the tales, such as "I Have a Noble Cock".

It is this racy, bawdy, and good humoured musical that the Domino Players are presently undertaking to be performed the 29, 30, and 31 of May at the Grand Theatre.

Even with only competent people this play could carry itself quite well, but under the direction of Norma Edwards are such actors-singers as C. Alan Anderson as Harry Bailey, the host; Ted Simmonett as the Squire; Kathleen Roberts as the inimitable Wife of Bath; her counterparts, the Nun and the Prioress are played by Rita McGrattan and Annabelle McCullough; and Deryck Hazel is Geoffrey Chaucer himself.

I recently had the chance to watch a rehearsal of the play when there was still a week and a half until the opening and even though I already knew most of the play, I found the delivery of the lines not only quite good but, even though the timing was, as of yet, a bit off, quite funny. The only major problems I saw were not insurmountable, and most were derived from simply having to have 22 people on a stage at one time.

Tickets are presently on sale at the Grand Theatre Box Office from 13.30 to 17.00, weekdays and cost $3.00 and $4.00 each. Remember, unlike most Domino productions The Canterbury Tales plays for only three nights, May 29, 30, and 31, and a word of warning; if you feel that Catcher in the Rye is obscene, you'll not last the first 20 minutes. If you doubt that Medieval literature could be so much fun, find a modern translation of either the Reeve's tale or the Miller's tale, both of which are in the play, and see for yourself.

Fellini's homecoming

by Sandra Bernstein

In the films of Federico Fellini, certain themes have always predominated. These include portrayal of the human condition, and the Italian way of life in particular, as well as Fellini's personal struggle to cope with aspects of his upbringing, his Catholic education, the influence of his parents, and his relationships with women.

His most recent film, Amarcord, which is nearing the end of its run at the Hyland, seems a logical development from these earlier works. A series of childhood memories, it combines the celebration of life found in films like Roma with the compassion of a man who has finally come to terms with his past.

For instance, although Amarcord is often very stylized, the portrayal of Fellini's parents is more real and sympathetic than in previous films. Similarly, he seems able to view the church with an indulgent sense of humour which lacks any of his former bitterness. It is unfortunate that these significant features have been distorted more than any by the atrocious English dubbing.

Amarcord is a very intimate, almost comfortable movie. For Fellini addicts it is like coming home: we recognize all the little touches that recur, Vonguet-style, in all his pictures. There are the cloaked schoolboys, often obese whores in red, foggy vapours, and dinner table scenes with papa at the head of the table and mama ladling soup. From Roma we remember the history-conscious citizen and the motorcycles tearing across the frame like shadows of death; from Il Bidone comes a delapidated farmhouse.

We are even more oriented by the Fellini style. He is probably the only director who could (as he does here) successfully carry off the rescue of a madman by a midget nun, without departing from perfectly good taste.

The film's seasonal motion covers a year in the life of Fellini's Romagnole home town. At the centre is the already-famous sequence that exemplifies Fellini at his best and most characteristic. There is an exhilarating travelling shot of the townspeople rushing to the pier, accompanied by carnival music, so that they can board boats and go out to greet the Rex, a massive ship scheduled to pass the village. It finally drifts past in the middle of the night, oblivious to the welcoming speech of the mayor. This scene, in which they are waiting in the middle of nowhere, links up with others in the film that suggest dreamy disorientation; together, they add an eerie, serious note, and render universal the particularized vignettes Amarcord portrays so lovingly.

The richness of the movie, however, rests largely in the variety of life it expresses so compactly: the indulgence in longings, fantasies, colours and textures, gestures and expressions, rituals and rites of passage that comprised his youth.

At the same time, Fellini seems to be acknowledging his own feelings of inadequacy for the task. At several points, we see a still photographer recording single moments of the events on the screen: a class photograph, a wedding picture. These, the director seems to say, can no more capture the reality we see on the screen than he can portray an era in a couple of hours.

The point is, generous but unimportant. The "reality" of his village might be no more interesting than that of Manawaka-Neepawa outside the novels of Margaret Laurence. It is Fellini's unique style, careful selection, and insight that bring it to life, and let it tell us a little more about being alive.

Notes on Spring Film Series

More than any other film genre, the horror film stands as a testimony to the pervasiveness of the mind-body split in western culture. For many of us, seeing a horror film is an excusable (if infrequent) means of limbering up our emotional responses to horror, violation and the irrational. We think of this exercise as we might regard an occasional visit to a masseur or a Sunday bicycle ride—for an otherwise neglected body these are hardly things we associate with intellectual pursuits. The barriers of acceding to emotional arousal are only reinforced by the assumption that horror films are merely "popular" culture rather than that noble species known as culture of HIGH CULTURE. And yet the horror film has a long and distinguished ancestry rooted in literature and ranking among its practitioners Carl Dreyer (VAMPYR) whose complex, formally precise chamber studies of human psychology are without parallel and F.W. Murnau (NOSFERATU) pioneer of German Expressionism and the moving camera in FAUST, THE LAST LAUGH and TARTUFFE. More recently, filmmakers of exceptional skill who have worked extensively in the genre are Robert Wise, Jacques Tourneur, Val Lewton, and Terence Fisher. And as well there are those who only occasionally but with great skill have turned to the genre for personal expression; filmmakers such as Roman Polanski and Alfred Hitchcock.

The horror film is an ideal format for examination of the hidden closets of the human mind—the unconscious, sexual impulse and the dynamic, peculiarly western struggle for self-mastery vs external control. This last is a struggle whose very nature often reflects the massive effort of mind to subdue body, of reason to conquer the irrational, a struggle where failure can truly possess the power to send chills up and down our spine.

Half of the films we have selected come from the 1950's when the horror film's psycho-sexual preoccupations were enriched by the fears and anxieties of the Cold War and the Atomic threat. Domination by "them"—creatures who transformed ordinary citizens into aliens or transported them to other planets (THIS ISLAND EARTH), creatures themselves products of man's tampering with the atom (THE THING) or the insecurity of trying to extend one's rational world to the "uncivilized" (CULT OF THE COBRA)—became an extension of a more persistent basic paranoia underlying the genre since its inception.

The other half of our program is rooted in the forties and in particular before the end of World War II. Whereas the films of the '50's reflect an insecurity which can be placated by rugged individualism and personal initiative the films of the preceding era are far bleaker. The rational, purposeful world of the forties is subverted in the genre of this period by ordinary citizens anthropomorphizing (CAT PEOPLE); through the denial of biological laws (ISLE OF THE DEAD) and the suppression and futility of individual initiative (LEOPARD MAN).

The two double bills on the program demonstrate our commitment to examining two films by the same director. The Tourneur films (CAT PEOPLE and LEOPARD MAN) were both produced by Val Lewton whose formula relied on suggestion, the power of the unknown, and the oblique Tourneur used this formula and the resources of the cinema—sound, silence, shadow—to hint at what he dared not show. His was a cinema of calculated understatement. The Arnold films (MONSTER ON CAMPUS and CREATURE FROM THE BLACK LAGOON) run in opposition to an achieved sublimity through manipulating the cinema's expressive elements and opt for a utilization of film technique to underscore those themes of the fifties mentioned earlier.

We invite you to enjoy these films both viscerally and reflectively as a selection of revealing insights into some of western man's most basic fears articulated within a set of codes and conventions that make them experientially accessible as well as intellectually decipherable for a broad and varied spectrum of people.

Fantasticks Opens Tonight

David Lepp, Dale Mieske, and Mo Bock in rehearsal for The Fantasticks

At 8:30 tonight the "curtain rises" on the musical production of The Fantasticks. The Fantasticks are a troupe of players: Matt and Luisa, the star-crossed lovers; Hucklebee and Bellomy, their fathers; Henry and Mortimer, an old Shakespearean actor and his Cockney Indian side-kick. There is also El Gallo, a dark and mysterious stranger who is the narrator of their story. And it is through the magic of the Mute that the audience is transported from its seat in the theatre into this world of fantasy.

The Fantasticks is liberally sprinkled with the magic of the theatre. Matt and Luisa, the young lovers of the play, search for the reality of love amidst swooning maidens, swash-buckling heroes, dissenting fathers, and villains in black. Comic madness rules the stage temporarily, but the play inevitably reflects "the kind of September when life was slow and oh, so mellow."

The Fantasticks is a celebration. It celebrates life, love, and song. It celebrates the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Queen's Drama Guild, through which the Queen's Own Players are producing the Fantasticks along with the assistance of fourth year Drama major, Don McKay, but most of all it is a celebration of the arrival of spring. A time for musical theatre to happen at Queen's and in Kingston.

The Fantasticks is directed by last year's Drama Guild President, David N. Fanstone, with musical direction by John Reeves. Also working on production are choreographer Sandra Aitken and professional designer Gavin Semple.

Starring in The Fantasticks are Dale Mieske and Janet Snarr as Matt and Luisa and George Pothitos and Barry Chamberlaine as Belamy and Hucklebee. Morison Bock plays Henry, and David Lepp his faithful friend, Mortimer. Sandra Aitken performs as the Mute with Roger Dunn appearing and disappearing as the mysterious narrator, El Gallo.

The Fantasticks opens tonight and runs through Sunday May 25, and then again from Tuesday May 27, to Saturday May 31. All performances are in Convocation Hall; curtain at 8:30 p.m. Information and tickets are available in room 108, Theological Hall, or by telephoning 547-2876. Tickets are $2.00 for students, $3.00 for non-students. Reserved seats in advance, rush seats at the door.

The Fantasticks can best be thought of in terms of its most famous song, "Try to Remember."

Deep in December, it's nice to remember

The fire of September that made us mellow

Deep in December our hearts should remember

And follow.....

AMS Housing

1 JANITOR NEEDED

To start duties June 1st

He or she would be responsible for a two unit apartment building, one of which would be his-hers. Experience in minor maintenance work is desirable. Please apply in writing to the A.M.S. office by 4:30 pm, May 28th (Queen's students only) and include a phone number or address where you may be reached. Having problems getting back into the swing of studying? The student counselling service is presently offering study skills counselling. If interested please call 547-2893 or come in to the Counselling Service at 32 Queen's Crescent.

Santana Coming to Kingston

Concert Productions International and the Kingston Memorial Centre have announced the imminent appearance of Santana and Frampton's Camel on Saturday May 31 at 8:00 at the Kingston Memorial Arena.

The show will be an interesting mixture of Carlos Santana's heavy cross-rhythms that first brought him to fame in the late sixties and his last works, such as those with Mahavishnu John McLaughlin. Accompanying Carlos Santana are many of the same artists that have been with Santana from its start.

Frampton's Camel, led by ex-Humble Pie guitarist, Peter Frampton, is an enjoyable rock and roll group with a high energy act that never gets too loud nor forgets to explore the subtleties of their music, whether it be electric or acoustic.

Tickets are $5.50 at the door or $3.00 advance at Vern Napier's, the John Orr Room, or at the House of Sounds.

Constraint Report: recommends larger classes, fee hike, but suggests enrolment be kept low

by Sarah Yarnell

The Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint, containing recommendations which could greatly affect Queen's faculty, staff and students, will be presented to the university Senate this afternoon. Recommendations include raising tuition, charging students and staff more for services such as Bus-it so that university subsidies may be reduced or eliminated, and requesting that the AMS consider reduction or elimination of intercollegiate athletics so that $20 students now pay to the University Athletic Fee could be reallocated to another student service. Contrary to fears, surpassing Queen's projected enrolment ceiling of 10,000, and the dismissal of tenured faculty were not included in the recommendations.

Rapidly decreasing government support of Ontario universities led to the appointment of the Committee on Financial Constraint in December, 1974. According to the Report, the Committee attempted to answer questions such as: "How can costs be reduced in absolute or relative terms? How can this be done with least effect on the quantity and quality of the university's functions of teaching and learning, research and public service?"

"Academic staff," the Report states, "will have larger groups of students; students can anticipate less individual attention from hard-pressed staff, and will have to exercise greater individual initiative; staff and students can anticipate paying more for the various services they receive; and those members of the Queen's staff whose duties are not in the teaching function will inevitably find themselves spread more thinly as they try to maintain the level of service they have given students and staff in the past."

"We believe," the Report continues, "that the university system has entered a period of severe stringency, and the messages from the Ontario government and elsewhere

clearly demand a process of cutting back that is much more than "trimming the fat". Whether this can be accomplished without permanent damage to the system will depend upon the spirit and the skill of the universities in meeting the present problems, and on the ultimate view of the role of universities taken by society." Universities have been criticized lately for not publicly stating their role in society, and for spending money in an allegedly loose way.

Reductions in academic staff are necessary, according to the Report, and so "the University must adopt a firm policy of non-replacement with exceptions only in those clear circumstances in which the reduction of staff complement would lead to the withdrawal of an essential program or service." Necessary hiring would take place by term appointment, "except in unusual circumstances, and at the most junior level suitable to the need." The Report recommends that a revision be undertaken of the Senate Statement on Academic Freedom and Tenure, "so that the necessary distinction may be made between academic freedom and tenure." Support staff should also be reduced, states the Report.

General library services must also be reduced; the Report recommends that saving could be achieved by reducing hours of service and by introducing a system of voluntary service to offset the reduced hours.

The Report recommended that the Principal establish an advisory group to assist him on a continuing basis with resource allocation and selection of constraints, because if the current government policy resulting in cutbacks is retained for many years, then expense reduction will have to continue through the years.

"In the years since 71-72, the increase in the value of the Basic Income Unit (BIU, unit value per student from which government grants are calculated) (2.0 percent, 3.4 percent and 7.1 percent respectively) did not keep up with the increase in the Consumer Price Index (CPI) (4.8 percent, 7.6 percent and 10.9 percent). In those three years the CPI has risen by 25 percent, while the BIU value has risen by less

These cutbacks in support led to the Queen's budget of 1975-76, with its deficit of $1.1 million. The Committee, when calculating the projected deficits up to 1980, labeled the University's problem "an unfair challenge". The Report recommends that the university try to convince the appropriate bodies and the general public of "the inequity of current policy and of the inevitable down-grading of the university system if the policy is continued."

"There could be a very significant trade-off from some of the drastic reductions recommended in this report if a way could be found to increase the net revenue from fees by say, $100 per student. (It goes without saying that any unilateral increase in fees would have to be accompanied by the provision of increased funds for scholarships and student aid in order to support those students who might otherwise be prevented from attending Queen's.)"

Summer Journal

Now that the annual staff turnover and financial crisis have been dealt with, the Summer Journal at last hits the streets. Weekly it will focus on what people are doing and thinking about in Kingston this summer...in the arts, in politics, in academics, in sports and recreation and in community involvement.

A great paper never just happens, however; it is the product of several individuals' suggestions and work. The quality and scope of the Summer Journal will depend on you, your ideas, time and effort are vital to its success. The Journal office is not closed to newcomers; its skeleton staff is not a clique. Contribute!

Outlook operating

On any Friday afternoon this summer a person stumbling into the normally business-like Student Volunteer Bureau offices on the first floor of the Students' Union will come face to face with a group of Outlook Campers and staff busily preparing for a weekend trip.

The weekend trips are an extension of the longer trips which have been conducted by Outlook since the summer of 1970. Outlook is a wilderness canoe-tripping camp operated by Queen's student volunteers which takes both underprivileged and delinquent teenagers from the Kingston community on ten day canoe trips. This year, under the directorship of Robb Fleming, they have introduced weekend trips for former campers and campers who find it necessary to work during the week.

Outlook maintains a base camp north of Bancroft, from which they stage trips into Algonquin Park. This summer Outlook will undertake a total of twelve ten day trips: four girls' and eight boys'. Two of the boys' trips will be made up of teenagers from the St. John's Training School in Uxbridge. On both the weekend and longer trips the camp tries to maintain a camper to staff ratio of 2:1.

The first trip of the year, a forty-two mile paddle and two mile portage through Big Gull Lake and parts of the Mississippi River was conducted last weekend. Thus from now until the end of August Camp Outlook will continue to offer, both staff and camper a fun-time and a meaningful experience in community living and sharing.

Although most staff positions are filled up, persons interested in working for Outlook should go up to the Outlook office on the first floor of the Union and talk to B.J. or Saima, the secretaries and chief bottle-washers. The offices are best found by using the University Ave. upper entrance to the Union.

Just another of the many comments about the gift, named "Pollution" donated to Kingston by Quebec during the Tercentenary year.

Letters to the editors

More Italian flicks

Dear Editor:
I am glad to see that some Italian films have been shown here recently. However, I believe that much more could be done. Films which I saw and loved include:

1) Roxo i suoi bratci
This is about a family which was close on the farm but which falls apart when it moves to the dehumanizing industrial city. This is a world-wide sociological problem.

2) Umberto D
This is about the loneliness and lack of prestige suffered by most old people.

3) Ladri di biciclette (Bicycle Thieves).

This is another Rossellini film about an honest man struggling to get and keep an honest job in an environment resembling the Depression.

Such films might be included in certain Sociology courses, yet be open to those not in the course for about $1. The courses might be Sociology 270, 271, 272, 273, 274 and 275. Naturally the films could be included in certain Spanish and Italian courses if desired.

Letters

The Summer Journal wants to hear about readers' ideas, criticisms, problems, views, etc. Letters should be sent to The Editors, Queen's Journal Office, Students' Memorial Union. The Editors reserve the right to edit letters, and in most cases will only print those which are signed by the writer.

Don't be an outcast!

Work for the Journal and be involved! People with ideas, energy and the desire to work long hours for no financial compensation are needed to pull together a Summer Journal. ## Chaucer's Tales

by Alan Mann
According to Geoffrey Chaucer (1343-1400), it was "When that April with his showres soote Thanne longen folk to goon on pilgrimages" but it will be the last days of May when the Domino Theatre presents The Canterbury Tales, a musical adaptation of Chaucer's Medieval poetic satire.

The original Canterbury Tales had some thirty pilgrims travelling from the Tabbard Inn in London to Canterbury Cathedral, the sight of the martyrdom of St. Thomas A. Becket. Their host and guide, Harry Bailey, the owner of the Inn, accompanies them and devises a contest to pass the time. Each pilgrim will tell a tale, and upon returning to the Inn, the best story teller will win a free meal.

It is this raciness and bawdiness that Nevill Coghill, Martin Starkie, Richard Hill, and John Hawkins took and adapted for the modern musical stage. All they really did was to update the words such as rich, like, and viage without destroying either the meaning or the rhyme of this epic poem, plus adding a few songs in keeping with the mood of the tales, such as "I Have a Noble Cock!"

It is this racy, bawdy, and good humoured musical that the Domino Players are presently undertaking to be performed the 29, 30, and 31 of May at the Grand Theatre.

Even with only competent people this play could carry itself quite well, but under the direction of Norma Edwards are such actors-singers as C. Alan Anderson as Harry Bailey, the host; Ted Simmonett as the Squire; Kathleen Roberts as the inimitable Wife of Bath; her counterparts, the Nun and the Prioress are played by Rita McGrattan and Annabelle McCullough; and Deryck Hazel is Geoffrey Chaucer himself.

I recently had the chance to watch a rehearsal of the play when there was still a week and a half until the opening and even though I already knew most of the play, I found the delivery of the lines not only quite good but, even though the timing was, as of yet, a bit off, quite funny. The only major problems I saw were not insurmountable, and most were derived from simply having to have 22 people on a stage at one time.

Tickets are presently on sale at the Grand Theatre Box Office from 13:30 to 17:00, weekdays and cost $3.00 and $4.00 each. Remember, unlike most Domino productions The Canterbury Tales plays for only three nights, May 29, 30, and 31, and a word of warning; if you feel that Catcher in the Rye is obscene, you'll not last the first 20 minutes. If you doubt that Medieval literature could be so much fun, find a modern translation of either the Reeve's tale or the Miller's tale, both of which are in the play, and see for yourself.

Notes on Spring Film Series

More than any other film genre, the horror film stands as a testimony to the pervasiveness of the mind-body split in western culture. For many of us, seeing a horror film is an excusable (if infrequent) means of limbering up our emotional responses to horror, violation and the irrational. We think of this exercise as we might regard an occasional visit to a masseur or a Sunday bicycle ride—for an otherwise neglected body these are hardly things we associate with intellectual pursuits. The barriers of acceding to emotional arousal are only reinforced by the assumption that horror films are merely "popular" culture rather than that noble species known as culture of HIGH CULTURE. And yet the horror film has a long and distinguished ancestry rooted in literature and ranking among its practitioners Carl Dreyer (VAMPYR) whose complex, formally precise chamber studies of human psychology are without parallel and F.W. Murnau (NOSFERATU) pioneer of German Expressionism and the moving camera in FAUST, THE LAST LAUGH and TARTUFFE. More recently, filmmakers of exceptional skill who have worked extensively in the genre are Robert Wise, Jacques Tourneur, Val Lewton, and Terence Fisher. And as well there are those who only occasionally but with great skill have turned to the genre for personal expression; filmmakers such as Roman Polanski and Alfred Hitchcock.

The horror film is an ideal format for examination of the hidden closets of the human mind—the unconscious, sexual impulse and the dynamic, peculiarity western struggle for self-mastery vs external control. This last is a struggle whose very nature often reflects the massive effort of mind to subdue body, of reason to conquer the irrational, a struggle where failure can truly possess the power to send chills up and down our spine.

Half of the films we have selected come from the 1950's when the horror film's psycho-sexual preoccupations were enriched by the fears and anxieties of the Cold War and the Atomic threat. Domination by "them"—creatures who transformed ordinary citizens into aliens or transported them to other planets (THIS ISLAND EARTH), creatures themselves products of man's tampering with the atom (THE THING) or the insecurity of trying to extend one's rational world to the "uncivilized" (CULT OF THE COBRA)—became an extension of a more persistent basic paranoia underlying the genre since its inception.

The other half of our program is rooted in the forties and in particular before the end of World War II. Whereas the films of the '50's reflect an insecurity which can be placated by rugged individualism and personal initiative the films of the preceding era are far bleaker. The rational, purposeful world of the forties is subverted in the genre of this period by ordinary citizens anthropomorphizing (CAT PEOPLE); through the denial of biological laws (ISLE OF THE DEAD) and the suppression and futility of individual initiative (LEOPARD MAN).

The two double bills on the program demonstrate our commitment to examining two films by the same director. The Tourneur films (CAT PEOPLE and LEOPARD MAN) were both produced by Val Lewton whose formula relied on suggestion, the power of the unknown, and the oblique. Tourneur used this formula and the resources of the cinema—sound, silence, shadows—to hint at what he dared not show. His was a do-to-hint at what he dared not show. His was a cinema of calculated understatement. The Arnold films (MONSTER FROM CAMPUS and CREATURE FROM THE BLACK LAGOON) run in opposition to an achieved subtly through manipulating the cinema's expressive elements and opt for a utilization of film technique to underscore those themes of the fifties mentioned earlier.

We invite you to enjoy these films both viscerally and reflectively as a selection of revealing insights into some of western man's most basic fears articulated within a set of codes and conventions that make them experientially accessible as well as intellectually decipherable for a broad and varied spectrum of people.

Fellini's homecoming

by Sandra Bernstein

In the films of Federico Fellini, certain themes have always predominated. These include portrayal of the human condition, and the Italian way of life in particular, as well as Fellini's personal struggle to cope with aspects of his upbringing: his Catholic education, the influence of his parents, and his relationships with women.

His most recent film, Amarcord, which is nearing the end of its run at the Hyland, seems a logical development from these earlier works. A series of childhood memories, it combines the celebration of life found in films like Roma with the compassion of a man who has finally come to terms with his past.

For instance, although Amarcord is often very stylized, the portrayal of Fellini's parents is more real and sympathetic than in previous films. Similarly, he seems able to view the church with an indulgent sense of humour which lacks any of his former bitterness. It is unfortunate that these significant features have been distorted more than any by the atrocious English dubbing.

Amarcord is a very intimate, almost comfortable movie. For Fellini addicts it is like coming home: we recognize all the little touches that recur. Vonnegut-style, in all his pictures. There are the cloaked schoolboys, often-obese whores in red, foggy vapours, and dinner table scenes with papa at the head of the table and mama lading soup. From Roma we remember the history-conscious citizen and the motorcycles tearing across the frame like shadows of death; from Il Bidone comes a delapidated farmhouse.

We are even more oriented by the Fellini style. He is probably the only director who could (as he does here) successfully carry off the rescue of a madman by a midget nun, without departing from perfectly good taste.

The film's seasonal motion covers a year in the life of Fellini's Romagna home town. At the centre is the already-famous sequence that exemplifies Fellini at his best and most characteristic. There is an exhilarating travelling shot of the townspeople rushing to the pier, accompanied by carnival music, so that they can board boats and go out to greet the Rex, a massive ship scheduled to pass the village. It finally drifts past in the middle of the night, oblivious to the welcoming speech of the mayor. This scene, in which they are waiting in the middle of nowhere, links up with others in the film that suggest dreamy disorientation; together, they add an eerie, serious note, and render universal the particularized vignettes Amarcord portrays so lovingly.

The richness of the movie, however, rests largely in the variety of life it expresses so compactly: the indulgence in longings, fantasies, colours and textures, gestures and expressions, rituals and rites of passage that comprised his youth.

At the same time, Fellini seems to be acknowledging his own feelings of inadequacy for the task. At several points, we see a still photographer recording single moments of the events on the screen—a class photograph, a wedding picture. These, the director seems to say, can no more capture the reality we see on the screen than he can portray an era in a couple of hours.

The point is generous but unimportant. The "reality" of his village might be no more interesting than that of Manawaka-Neepawa outside the novels of Margaret Laurence. It is Fellini's unique style, careful selection, and insight that bring it to life, and let it tell us a little more about being alive.

Fantasticks Opens Tonight

David Lepp, Dale Mieske, and Mo Bock in rehearsal for The Fantasticks

At 8:30 tonight the "curtain rises" on the musical production, of The Fantasticks. The Fantasticks are a troupe of players: Matt and Luisa, the star-crossed lovers; Hucklebee and Bellomy, their fathers; Henry and Mortimer, an old Shakespearean actor and his Cockney Indian sidekick. There is also El Gallo, a dark and mysterious stranger who is the narrator of their story. And it is through the magic of the Mute that the audience is transported from its seat in the theatre into this world of fantasy.

The Fantasticks is liberally sprinkled with the magic of the theatre, Matt and Luisa, the young lovers of the play, search for the reality of love amidst swooning maidens, swash-buckling heroes, dissenting fathers, and villains in black. Comic madness rules the stage temporarily, but the play inevitably reflects "the kind of September when life was slow and oh, so mellow."

The Fantasticks is a celebration. It celebrates life, love, and song. It celebrates the seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Queen's Drama Guild, through which the Queen's Own Players are producing the Fantasticks along with the assistance of fourth year Drama major, Don McKay, but most of all it is a celebration of the arrival of spring. A time for musical theatre to happen at Queen's and in Kingston.

The Fantasticks is directed by last year's Drama Guild President, David N. Farnstone, with musical direction by John Keever. Also working on production are choreographer Sandra Aitken and professional designer Gavin Semple.

Starring in The Fantasticks are Dale Mieske and Janet Snarr as Matt and Luisa and George Pothilos and Barry Chamberlaine as Belamy and Hucklebee. Morison Bock plays Henry, and David Lepp his faithful friend, Mortimer. Sandra Aitken performs as the Mute with Roger Dunn appearing and disappearing as the mysterious narrator, El Gallo.

The Fantasticks opens tonight and runs through Sunday May 25, and then again from Tuesday May 27, to Saturday May 31. All performances are in Convocation Hall, curtain at 8:30 p.m. Information and tickets are available in room 109, Theological Hall, or by telephoning 547-2876. Tickets are $2.00 for students, $3.00 for non-students. Reserved seats in advance, rush seats at the door.

The Fantasticks can best be thought of in terms of its most famous song, "Try to Remember..."

Deep in December, it's nice to remember

The fire of September that made us mellow

Deep in December our hearts should remember

And follow.....

Santana Coming to Kingston

Concert Productions International and the Kingston Memorial Centre have announced the imminent appearance of Santana and Frampton's Camel on Saturday May 31 at 8:00 at the Kingston Memorial Arena.

The show will be an interesting mixture of Carlos Santana's heavy cross-rhythms that first brought him to fame in the late sixties and his last works, such as those with Mahavishnu John McLaughlin. Accompanying Carlos Santana are many of the same artists that have been with Santana from its start.

Frampton's Camel, led by ex-Humble Pie guitarist, Peter Frampton, is an enjoyable rock and roll group with a high energy act that never gets too loud nor forgets to explore the subtleties of their music, whether it be electric or acoustic.

Tickets are $5.50 at the door or $5.00 advance at Vern Napier's, the John Orr Room, or at the House of Sounds.

OFS meeting planned at Mac this weekend

by OFS Fieldworker Marilyn Burnett

This weekend the Fourth Annual General Meeting of the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) will be held at McMaster University, Hamilton. Queen's delegation will include Craig Brown (Chief Delegate), John Wilson, VP (Univ. Affairs), Peter Lane (Ext. Affairs Commissioner) and possibly another alternate delegate. Areas to be discussed in workshops and plenary sessions include trends in government policy, orientation programmes, students and jobs, strategy for the provincial election, etc.

Generally speaking, the conference's objectives are threefold - to conduct the administrative business of the OFS, to have a free and open discussion of provincial issues that concern students (summer assistance programmes, decline in the quality of education, etc.), and to agree upon some strategies for action.

Possible strategies include forming closer ties with faculty and support staff organizations to exert pressure on issues of common concern; working more closely with community groups and organized labour to inform them of the consequences of the government action in terms of the financial barriers to be faced by their children if they choose to attend post-secondary institutions. In response to a report prepared by Peter Lane, it is also hoped that a Health Care Students Caucus can be formed, so that the whole issue of stipends and/or salaries paid to these students for their clinical work can be discussed.

Perhaps one of the most important decisions to be made by the conference will concern strategy for the upcoming provincial elections - should OFS actively support one party; should we simply act as critics of party platforms assessing how each affects students; what role should OFS play on each campus during the election? These are all very critical issues, and the decisions made may affect us for years to come.

All in all, it should be a most important conference, and an active voice from Queen's is anticipated.

Vanier

Individuals must break communication barriers

by Barbara Nyland

It is up to each individual to try to break down modern communication barriers, emphasized Jean Vanier as he spoke to a large crowd in the Jock Hardy Arena last Friday night.

Vanier, the son of the late Governor-General Vanier and Madame Vanier was paying his fourth visit to Queen's in the past four years before he began a biennial retreat with the leaders of all the L'Arche homes. It is a founder and continuing worker within these centres for mentally handicapped adults that Vanier is most famous. The homes are now scattered through India, Africa, the British Isles, United States and Canada.

Because of his work with these adults, prisoners and citizens of underdeveloped countries, Vanier has developed a sensitive understanding of modern man's incapacity to live peacefully with his fellow human beings.

Vanier questioned why Canadians could not do such a simple thing as learn a second language. If we can't learn French how can we understand people in distant parts of the world, he asked. "How can we break through spiritual walls, walls which are thicker than prison walls."

Corruption in world affairs and present economic problems are merely indications that the material aspects of life have no truly solid foundation. Western man is reacting to these problems of affluence by living more and more in an unreal world. "The more we go into the world of comfort, the more we go into a world of dreams," he said. Vanier emphasized "this statement by describing the living-rooms of many modern homes. No longer do people sit in a circle and talk to each other, he stated. The chairs form a semi-circle around a television set.

The heat in the arena was stifling but this tall gaunt man completely captured the attention of the audience. His large hands molded his words as he spoke of the need of everyone, not only his brothers and sisters in prison and in L'Arche homes, to be respected and loved. To prove that they are not rejected many men strive for power, the right to say 'I'm better than you are'. The only result of these actions is fear and prejudice. We become 'locked in ourselves.'

Love is the only route to freedom, Vanier said. The love he described was not merely a relationship between two people but "a mutual understanding or a growing together in the stream of life." The family should become closer but Vanier feels that this love should grow into a love for the rest of the world also. If the family holds the pleasure of their love within themselves they are only causing more disunity. Children should be brought up not with ideas imposed on them by their parents but with the desire to live a life of sharing with and helping those who are less fortunate than they.

Vanier feels that we can react to today's problems by revolting or despairing. "But wouldn't it be better," he urged the audience, "if we prepared ourselves for tomorrow by living profoundly today; if we let our fears be quelled and were open to other people, living this day in love."

Forum felt concern for racism increase

by Mary Jane Lipkin

Deep concern about the increase of racism in Canada, was expressed at a public forum on Tuesday in Dunning Hall dealing with Canada's Immigration Policy and the deportation of Haitian immigrants. The forum was sponsored by several Kingston groups, in particular the Revolutionary Marxist Group which has appeared in Kingston during the last year. The forum included three speakers: a student studying in detail the Government's Immigration Green Paper; 'Rosie' Douglas, head of the committee protesting deportation of Haitians from Canada; and Vern Harper, president of the Toronto Warrior's Society. The main theme of the meeting was the Federal Government's use of the immigration laws and immigrants as scapegoats for the failing economic condition of the country. The meeting emphatically pointed out that the cause of Canada's economic problems is the capitalist system not immigrants and that the subtle government plot to blame immigration for economic problems arouses intense racist sentiment.

It was explained that Canada's discriminatory policy encouraging Western European immigration while preventing Black and Asian immigration had always been in effect but in recent years the Government has been less blatant about it for fear of offending its 'liberal' principles.

Vern Harper, a participant in the Indian occupation of federal buildings in Ottawa last summer, declared that "the North American Indians can no longer seek answers within the system and are consequently channelling their agitation into achieving a socialist state." Harper joked that the North American Indian has always welcomed newcomers to their land.

'Rosie' Douglas, of course protested his and other's deportation from Canada in addition to demanding complete abolition of the penal system. Douglas served time in Collins Bay Penitentiary for the 1969 Sir George Williams computer "Smash-Up". He also called for the release of all black prisoners who are, in his opinion, all political prisoners.

The speakers at the forum called for participation in a nation-wide demonstration to be held on Saturday May 24 protesting racism and in particular the deportation of the Haitians. Five hundred demonstrators turned out in Toronto on Saturday but official sources reported that more than half of the demonstrators preferred to picnic in the sun rather than listen to the political speakers.

Jean Vanier spoke to a large crowd at the Jock Hardy arena on Friday night. Vanier is the founder and a worker in the famous L'Arche homes.

Lyn Whitham and Terry MacI Job Bank Co-Directors at work

Job Bank's wickets are open

The official opening of Job Bank was held Monday at Career Planning and Placement. Principal Ronald Watts, Alderman Keith Norton and Alderwoman Lois Miller officiated at the ceremony. At 1 p.m. the trio cut the ribbon to the Job Bank quarters at the back of 131 Union.

During the coffee and donut reception after the ceremony, Terry MacI and Lyn Whitham, co-directors of Job Bank, expressed their feelings that the job situation is just starting to open up.

Whitham and MacI reported that full-time jobs are becoming more plentiful. The co-directors also emphasized the point that part-time jobs, especially painting, can often mushroom into full-time summer employment. Jobs now coming through Job Bank are varied, including openings for truck drivers, gas station attendants, waitresses and researchers, to name a few. Both directors stressed that those persons who come in often to check new listings are those most likely to obtain satisfactory summer employment.

Prominent Canadians receive honorary doctoral degrees

This Saturday, May 31, convocation ceremonies will be held for those students graduating in the Faculty of Arts and Science. Four distinguished Canadians will receive honorary Doctor of Laws degrees during the morning and afternoon exercises. Well-known Canadian writer, Margaret Laurence, will receive her sixth honorary degree. Her first novel "This Side Jordan", was published in 1960 and she has since had nine more books published. The film, "Rachel, Rachel" was made from her novel, "A Jest of God", for which she received the Governor-General's Award in 1967.

Also receiving an honorary degree on Saturday morning is Herbert Hamilton, who has just retired from his post of Director of the Alumni Association of Queen's, where he served for almost forty years in various capacities. A Queen's graduate, Mr. Hamilton was manager of Queen's Employment Service for almost twenty years and served on a number of other University organizations.

J. Douglas Gibson will receive an honorary degree and will address the afternoon Convocation. After a distinguished career with the Bank of Nova Scotia, Mr. Gibson became a consulting economist and professor at York University in 1965. Author of numerous articles on Canadian economic and financial subjects, and Chairman or Director of ten major Canadian corporations, Mr. Gibson became Chairman of Queen's University's Board of Trustees in 1969.

A. Vibert Douglas, internationally-known Canadian astrophysicist, will also receive an honorary Doctor of Laws degree on Saturday afternoon. Past President of both the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada and of the International Federation of University Women, Dr. Douglas received an MBE for her service during World War I. She was Dean of Women at Queen's for 20 years and became a Professor of Astronomy in 1946.

At Convocation ceremonies last Friday afternoon, honorary Doctor of Laws degrees were conferred upon Robert W.B. Jackson, Director of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education; and Anthony Adamson, distinguished city and town planner, who also addressed the graduating class. Samuel Delves, minister at Cooke's Portsmouth United Church, received an honorary Doctor of Divinity.

Four Canadians were honoured at last Saturday's Convocation as well. Sylvia Ostry, Deputy Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Deputy Registrar General gave the morning address. An honorary Doctor of Science degree was conferred upon F. Morris Wood, civil engineer and Emeritus Professor of Queen's.

The afternoon Convocation on May 24th saw Florence Bird, journalist and 1967 Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada, receive an honorary degree. Also honored was Edward Dunlop, Managing Director of the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society, who delivered the afternoon address.

University Council meets

Following the tradition of acquainting University Councilors with new facilities, Queen's is hosting this year's meeting at the Donald Gordon Centre on May 30th. Last year's gathering took place in Mackintosh-Corry Hall.

On the prior evening, May 29th, H.I. Macdonald, President of York University will give an address at McArthur Hall, launching the theme of this year's meeting, "The University and Governments". Workshops and a panel review the next day will continue to explore this theme. Councilors will also hear the Principal's Report and witness the inaugural presentation of the Council Distinguished Service Award.

The University Council represents all facets of the Queen's family; its 192 members include the Trustees, all Senators, and an equal number (96) of elected graduates.

Preview to '76 Olympics

On Saturday, May 31st, as part of Festival Kingston Queen's University along with the Ontario Track and Field Association and the Kingston Olympics Public Events Committee, will sponsor a quadrangular track and field meet featuring teams from Ontario, Quebec, New England, and New York. Invitational events and relays will be included and several Canadian champions, both male and female, will be competing. Several familiar names from Queen's will compete - Vic Gooding (100 and 200 metre dash), Kevin Thompson (shot put), and Dave Jarvis (400 metre hurdles). The meet is billed as a preview to the 1976 Olympics and spectators are certainly invited to attend. Action starts at noon on Saturday at George Richardson Stadium on West Campus. Admission is $1 for adults and 50c for children.

Wanted: Hockey field?

Steve Gareau, a Queen's student here for the summer, is trying to pull together a summer field hockey league. Since he posted a notice in the Students' Union, more than twenty-five people have either signed up or contacted him.

Fifteen people showed up for the league's first game, which was played in the field behind Vic Hall. A marked field is what the league is looking for at the moment, however. Equipment is provided by the Phys Ed Centre, through Brian Groos, one of the players in the fledgling league and a member of the Queen's field hockey club.

Those interested in playing in the league should call Steve Gareau at 548-8672, or leave a message for him in the International Centre Office.

Focus misplaced

The Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint ends where it should have begun. The final two paragraphs mention that course offerings and teaching methods should be reviewed; this should have formed the focal point of the Report. As academic salaries make up 50 percent of the operating budget, and as instruction is assumed to be one of the University's main functions, a review of instructional processes should have received considerable attention by the committee established to examine and suggest solutions to the problem of diminishing financial resources.

Very little has been done by Queen's deans, administration or Senate regarding evaluation of instructional processes, so it's not surprising that this received so little attention by the Constraint Committee. However, research into this area has been carried out by others, including the Ontario Universities Program for Instructional Development (working under the auspices of the Joint Committee on Instructional Development of the Committee on University Affairs and the Council of Ontario Universities.) This program, which is two years old and directed by Dr. Harold M. Good (who will return to the Queen's biology dept. this summer), held a workshop in November, 1973 to discuss priorities which the program should adopt for 1974. Ideas emerging from this workshop, which was attended by 70 staff and students of Ontario universities including Queen's, included needs for:

- more precise enunciation of the University's objectives at all levels (institutional, course, lesson).
- more critical evaluation of students, teachers and programs, with evaluations carefully applied to these objectives.
- more varied formats for presentation of programs; for example, independent study courses available intramurally - perhaps as alternatives to the present form.

- Instructional Development Committees or Centres on each campus.

These ideas have more or less fallen on deaf ears - no committee of the sort suggested has been established at Queen's.

People at Queen's continue to blindly believe that a proliferation of specialized courses is an asset to the University's academic quality. But look at the British Open Universities where students take two generalized courses per year! Standards for measuring quality of education continue to be class size and student-professor contact. How can we just believe that a medium-size lecture class is preferable to a large one? Ontario government suggestions that universities should consider cutting out some departments, programs and courses which are offered at other universities, are met with violent reactions by people who feel that this would lead to a University of Ontario. But if under the current system universities are having trouble maintaining quality of individual programs, then why is this idea not being considered at this time?

Various teaching methods have yet to be given an intensive review at Queen's. While old, traditional methods involving lecture, seminar and tutorial have been clung to, very little has been done towards discovering or implementing new methods of blending these, alternative methods. One idea which should be considered is that of bringing back more reading courses which would help save money paid to faculty members for lecturing, and would free them to spend more time in discussion with students. Independent study programs, of which this is only one example, have been studied by the Ontario Universities Program for Instructional Development. Dr. Good summarized various viewpoints on independent study, which have been expressed at conferences and meetings organized by the Program:

1. Accessibility - even people who live too far away from the university to attend normal classes are eligible for enrolment in a correspondence type program.
2. Independence - students develop the ability to think on their own; they retain more of what is learned.
3. Economy - professors do not have to lecture, but can spend time discussing the students' studies with them.
4. Budget - potentially larger "classes" justify greater amounts of time and expense for course preparation and for materials.

The educational objectives inherent in these viewpoints appear to be instilling in students the ability to think critically and independently, to retain what has been learned. Are these wise objectives? Are they shared by Queen's? Just what are the "priorities intended" which have been referred to in the constraint report? An answer to the latter question is hard to find.

It is obvious since instructional processes have not received due attention by the Committee in its preparation of the Report, and because Queen's educational priorities have yet to be concretely defined, that this Report should be sent back for more work. The Committee should take the summer to get in touch with the Ontario Universities Program for Instructional Development and to study their ideas and suggestions.

Summer Council and the Alma Mater Society Executive must ensure that this is done. They must also pressure the Committee to hold release of the revised Report until intramural students return to Queen's in the fall; only then can a proper student reaction be expected.

The argument that there is insufficient time to examine this issue must be ignored - we cannot afford to pass up this chance to do what is long overdue and what will have a great effect on the quality of education - to examine educational priorities and instructional processes at Queen's.

What's a mother to do?

Financial Constraints - The wordy phrase that has just been defined. Let's presume the worst. This is when the AMS and its membership should begin to think about what can be done. Thoughts should have been generated long ago, but students have ostracized themselves in the hopes that the problem would not blister until they graduated. The amazing thing is that the proposals contained in the Principal's Committee report, if acted upon as soon as indicated, will affect every student planning to graduate in 1977. Bigger classes, higher tuition, and the elimination of those little things that nobody pays much attention to presently but, when gone, will mean a marked difference in life at Queen's.

This may well prove to be the most important test of the Alma Mater Society in its 117 yr. history. Plans should now be formulated to incorporate into its scheme of activities a number of ways that the society could as a team raise funds to make sure that we need not go without some of the more fundamental things. Teams and library books should never be sacrificed and, from the report, these appear to be headed down a slow path to the chopping block. What could be more basic to the retention of the exceptional Queen's spirit than her teams competing in intercollegiate athletics? And where is a university without a library that offers the best service and resources available?

A proposal for a lottery that would raise more than $50,000 for the most pressing problems went to the AMS meeting last night originating from the Journal. The proposal is a workable one and one which should produce tangible results. Many more such fund raising activities should be in the works. Hopefully, through the dedicated efforts of such individuals as Brian Copeland, AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner, who is putting a lot of work towards the Lottery concept, we will see more endeavours of this nature. The money can always be used in the students' interests even if the Government decides to change its mind on cutbacks, but don't wager the rent. $50,000 won't go very far in helping million dollar deficits. Nevertheless raising money with projects is certainly less painful than a lost service and is far more imaginative.

Tenure review - finally

The Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint has shown that the current financial situation at Queen's is indeed as drastic as rumoured. The recommendations of the Committee are detailed. One particular recommendation, which asserts that a review must be made of the Senate Statement on Academic Freedom and Tenure "so that the necessary distinction may be made between academic freedom and job security, is excellent and long overdue. Principal Watts stated when the Report was released one week ago, that tenure is designed to guarantee a university professor academic freedom (a professor cannot be fired for his political beliefs) but that this does not mean that if the university can no longer afford to pay him, or if his position has become redundant, that his job cannot be terminated. When the Senate Statement on Academic Freedom and Tenure was drawn up in the late 1960's, the time when Queen's would have to reduce its academic payroll was not anticipated, and so tenure was conceived of by many people as a guaranteed job for life. Up until now no one has had the guts to say that it's not.

Too relaxed?

Summer in Kingston. People sitting on porches invite you over for a barbeque. Tent plays in the parks, cool walks along the lakeshore, and washing down a dry throat with an iced glass of beer.

The relaxed atmosphere permeates everything. Even at Queen's Pub the workers now may sip drinks between orders. Happily turning over cash at evening's end these people could find themselves short of an-anticipated earnings. It is not for this paper to pass judgement on the wisdom of this move but we would have to wonder about the reasons behind the change in regulations. Why increase the probability of mistakes in transactions of money for patrons, for dismissals of staff as well as diminishing the appearance of professionalism at Queen's Pub?

Surely this is too relaxed, even for summertime Kingston.

Student leadership needed

by Mary Bloos

In one short week the Financial Constraint Report has become a fact of Queen's. Everywhere the Report is being discussed and presumably the Principal will receive the desired "feedback" in time for lively debate at the June Senate meeting.

One wonders whether the student body will again miss the boat on this issue.

That is, will the Report be received as a de facto situation, complete with the usual hand-wringing and hot-air rhetoric, or will the students via the AMS respond in a more appropriate fashion by bringing pressure to bear on the government to reconsider its present policy?

From the time of his Installation address, Dr. Watts has been warning of hard times ahead; however he, like his colleagues at other universities, have gone mostly unheard in their cries for monetary mercy. The reason is quite simple. A few professional beggars are unlikely to sway the government in a time of tight money and at a time when universities are seen as squatting at the foot of the fiscal totem pole.

There has been little or no public support for the Principal originating out of the student body, and until John Q. Ontario is convinced that the university is both an exciting and valuable institution well worth preserving, irregular excursions to Queen's Park by various members of the AMS will have little chance of changing things.

It may well be that the lack of student response is symptomatic of the present university scene. At the moment Queen's is quite a dull, lifeless and unexciting place to be. There is no "electricity in the air" as there should be at a university, and the student government past and present is far less than imaginative. Student leadership is needed badly at this time and if it is not to be forthcoming from the elected representatives, spokesmen must be found who can revive the dying horse and who can turn out the business oriented government and replace it with a more relevant political-philosophical and educational leadership which is so sorely needed and has been and is so painfully lacking.

The Board of Trustees in their wisdom have allowed Queen's to run a million dollar deficit for '75-76 in order to buy a year's time for considered planning before the cuts. This means the pinch has been postponed for one more year. Most students will not experience any drastic changes next year. Hopefully this will not be equivalent to yet another year of complacency. The time for response is at hand!

Where's Terry Watson?

by J. P. Wilmshurst

Anyone who was on campus in the fall of 1973 probably remembers the name Terry Watson. At that time a letter to the editors of the Queen's Journal signed by Terry Watson announced the formation of the Queen's University Homophile Association. Up to that time Queen's had had the dubious distinction of being the only major university in Ontario without some sort of organized gay group. About two dozen people, both men and women, came to the first meeting, and a program of activities was planned. In addition, the group ran the Gay Rap Line, designed to provide an initial contact for prospective members.

During the 1973-74 academic year, meetings and parties were held about twice a month, and by the spring, membership numbered about 50, about half of whom were not connected directly with the university community. In August of 1974, the constitution was submitted to the Alma Mater Society and the group became an officially recognized AMS organization. But at the same time one of the founding members left Kingston, and lack of decisive leadership became a problem. By March of this year the group became dormant, and no official activities have been held since then, although some individuals have been hosting private parties.

Why has there not been more interest shown? At University of Guelph, which has about the same enrolment as Queen's, and which is located in a city about the same size as Kingston, the Homophile Association is very active and has weekly licensed dances in one of the downtown hotels. At least 100 people were present at the one I attended a few weeks ago.

What is it about Queen's and Kingston that makes gay people so reluctant to "come out"? Many feel, with perhaps some justification, that they will encounter problems with friends, or professional associates, if they reveal themselves as being gay. There is undeniably still a great deal of prejudice and discrimination against gay people in our society, but in many cases this is based on ignorance and lack of understanding. If more people were willing to come out and let their friends, family and associates know that they were gay, they would probably find that the reaction would be positive and supportive.

Gay people who are open about their sexuality, usually find that this approach makes things a lot easier for them in many respects. The increased sense of personal freedom is tremendous.

Coining out (acknowledging one's homosexuality) is a long and sometimes painful process. I don't expect that this article will result in a great upsurge of gay activity at Queen's, but if it makes it a little easier for a few people, and promotes some intelligent discussion of the topic, it will have served some purpose.

This week and next, the Gay Rap Line will be manned Thursday evenings from 8pm to 9pm. Phone 547-2836 to chat, ask questions, or whatever.

- Gay is proud!

Now At Agnes Etherington

Springtime Turds by Tobey Anderson-mixed media on paper

by Alan Mann
The Agnes Etherington Art Centre is at present housing two special exhibitions, both dealing with the works of Ontario artists. Spring Exhibition '75 is this year's results of the annual contest held by the Art Centre. Juried by Tony Urquhart, this year's contest differed from those of the past years' since only entries from Ontario were accepted. This was done in an attempt to make the judging a bit more manageable, but still some 591 entries from 199 different artists were entered. Also, instead of awarding cash prizes to the winners, purchase awards were instituted with the assistance of matching funds from the Ontario Arts Council. In the end, Tony Urquhart chose 76 "drawings" by 66 different artists 12 of which were purchased by the Art Centre.

The second exhibition is a collection of 15 sea paintings by Ron Bolt, a painter from Toronto. These works have "evolved from two summers spent in Newfoundland and a recent visit to Cuba." Bolt's impressions of the different moods of "the mother of all things" as well as the difference in the "language" of the northern and southern seas, have resulted in an amazingly powerful and colourful series of paintings.

Spring Exhibition '75 continues until June 25, and the Ron Bolt: Sea Paintings remains until June 29.

Horror Films

by Micheal Creagen
The Film Department is currently running a summer series, The Horror Film of the '40's and '50's. Every Wednesday night until July 2, horror films will be shown in Ellis Hall, tracing the development of the genre from 1944 to 1960.

There are not too many films in Kingston during the summer, and the series needs your support to ensure summer screenings in the future. So for a good scare, be at Ellis Hall next Wednesday, 20:30 hrs. with $1.50—you won't be disappointed.

The remainder of the schedule is:
June 4 The Thing (1951)
June 11 Cult of the Cobra (1955)
June 18 Monster on the Campus (1958)
& Creature from the Black Lagoon
June 25 This Island Earth (1955)
July 2 Brides of Dracula (1960)

Santana Frampton Phantom Flops

by August West
By this time, I trust that everyone is aware of the Santana Frampton concert on May 31 at the Kingston Memorial Centre. I also trust that most people who have operated an A.M. radio are familiar with some of Santana's earlier work. Knowledge of Frampton's style, however, is not so commonplace.

Peter Frampton is a veteran of the British rock scene. For years, he played with a number of lesser known bands until, in the late sixties, he found himself in the group Humble Pie. In 1972, just as Humble Pie had reached its prime, Frampton broke away and recorded the album "Wind of Change". For many, this album was a surprise for it reflected none of his earlier Humble Pie roots. Frampton managed to put out his own superb style of rock and roll—a crisp balance of energy and subtle, flowing guitar work. Two cuts which best demonstrate this are Frampton's version of the Rolling Stones "Jumpin' Jack Flash" and his own "The Lodger".

Since "Wind of Change", Frampton has released three more albums: "Frampton's Camel" (1973), "Something Happening" (1974), and "Frampton" (1975). Frampton's rock and roll is very much in good taste and each of his four albums reflects this. To recommend a favourite is pointless. His voice carries him through either mellow or rocking songs. It is never out of place nor is it awkward. He is also a master of both the acoustic and electric guitars. The guitars are sometimes used separately and sometimes blended in such songs as Stevie Wonder's "I Believe" and Frampton's "Show me the Way", to produce some powerful and yet gently rocking ballads. Peter Frampton is a polished musician and as such always appears confident.

Peter Frampton is playing back-up in Santana's current spring tour. In Ontario, Santana-Frampton will be in Hamilton (May 28), Toronto (May 29), Ottawa (May 30), and Kingston (May 31).

Santana has a well known reputation, which should draw the crowds, and Frampton has a unique style sure to please almost any audience. The Santana-Frampton concert should be the largest thing to hit Kingston since the Who played in the late sixties.

Sandra Bernstein
"Faust? Who? What label's he on?"

This is the first reaction composer Winslow Leach receives from a scout of all-powerful rock promoter Swan when he tries to sell his rock cantata based on the Faust legend. Little does he know that Swan intends to steal the cantata and open the gates of his new rock palace, the Paradise, with a performance of it.

It is only after Leach has been framed, escaped from Sing Sing, had half his face wrecked in a record presser, signed an eternal contract in blood and seen the love of his life thrown out of the starring role of the opera, that he discovers that Swan is not only a nasty individual but a Mephistopheles figure himself under contract. Leach haunts the hellish depths of the Paradise, sabotaging the production and trying to save his lady, Phoenix, (Jessica Harper) from a fate worse than death.

This amalgamation of the old horror film The Phantom of the Opera Wilde's The Picture of Dorian Gray and the Faust legend about a man who makes a pact with the devil, is the story of Brian de Palma's latest film, The Phantom of the Paradise.

The movie, currently playing at the Capitol, has several points in its favour: the idea, some interesting photography, and the performance of Geritt Graham as a gay glitter star named Beef.

Unfortunately de Palma has not managed to make the film the success it could be. His essential problem is that he has a strong point of view but no approach to handling it. The film wavers between spoof and hostile indictment of the corrupt rock music world, with its exploitation of women, manipulation of performers through contracts and drugs, and staging of violence which the fans seem to demand.

Similarly de Palma can't seem to decide what he thinks of Phoenix. Is she the ideal Leach finds her, part of the spoof contingent, or as much a cheery opportunist as the other groupies and "singers" around?

Also, Paul Williams' sound-track differs from previous rock operas in that it is dull. The lyrics, which could have been exploited, add nothing. The distinctly background music compels us to tune it out, except in two scenes with the Juicy Fruits, a greaser band.

Rock fans who like this film are probably drawing on things outside it. In my opinion Williams should have taken his idea to Mel Brooks.

13:30 to 17:00 hours weekdays with rush tickets at the door. Tickets cost $3.00 and $4.00 each. Remember, unlike most Domino productions, The Canterbury Tales plays for only three nights, May 29, 30 and 31.

Domino Players Present

C. Alan Anderson as Bailey with guests

Tonight at the Grand Theatre, is the opening of Domino Player's production of the musical story The Canterbury Tales. Adapted by Nevill Coghill and Martin Starkie from Chaucer's famous Medieval poem, with music by Richard Hill and John Hawkins, and Nevill Coghill's lyrics, this racy, bawdy, good-humoured musical is an unabridged version of exactly what Medieval literature was, fun.

The original Canterbury Tales had some thirty pilgrims travelling from the Tabard Inn in London to Canterbury Cathedral, the sight of the martyrdom of St. Thomas of Becket. Their host and guide, Harry Bailey, the owner of the Inn accompanies them and devises a contest to pass the time: each pilgrim will tell a tale, and upon returning to the Inn, the best story teller will win a free meal.

Chaucer's characters are varied. To name a few: A Knight ther was and that a worthy man That loved chivalrye, Truthe and honour, freedom and curteisye

With him ther was his sone, a yong Squere.

A lover and a lusty bachelor Of twenty year of age he was, I guess.

A Clerk ther was of Oxford also A Reeve and a Miller, and "A good Wif ther was of Bathes But she was somedeel deef, and that was scathe."

One would think that these noble pilgrims on route to the shrine would relate tales almost directly from the Bible, but no. Although love and marriage are the basic themes of the stories, one can almost imagine the Board of Education refusing to let The Canterbury Tales be taught to secondary school students.

It is this Medieval unabashedness that has been captured and adapted for the modern musical stage. Words such as sich, like and viage were updated without destroying either the meaning or the rhyme of this epic poem, plus adding a few songs in keeping with the mood of the tales, like the scholar's song, "I Have a Noble Cock!"

Artistic Recession

by Alan Mann

Perhaps the greatest problem facing Canadian universities, as well as those in other countries, is the rising financial support required to keep them not only operative, but to also keep them up to date with the latest advances in all fields. After all, it is necessary for students in practical fields to be trained on equipment at least similar to the equipment used by professionals in that field. This, as well as the inflationary trend, is the reason for the Report of the Principal's Committee On Financial Constraint published last week.

Many of the recommendations are quite worthwhile, some are debatable, and a few seem quite reasonable. The one in particular that I'll be discussing here is the one found on page 7 of the supplement of the Queen's Gazette printed on May 22, 1975, at the top of the second column. It reads: 8. Performing Arts Office

We recommend that the subsidy to this office be eliminated, either by closing the office and allocating its functions to other departments, by increasing ticket revenues to a level that will support administrative costs, or by finding external funds to replace those from the University's budget.

So what, one might say, I've never heard of the Performing Arts Office. That could be for one of two reasons: up until this January it was known as the Queen's Division of Concerts, or simply the fact that Administrative Offices don't seem to get the publicity they so justly deserve, but if you attended any of the Vibrant Stage series' productions or attended any of the special events such as the Beggars Workshop production of The Night No One Yelled, you've enjoyed the fruits of their work.

Needed or not

Let us first decide whether or not such events as the Royal Shakespeare Company's Pleasure and Repentance or the Charlottetown Festival's Anne of Green Gables, or workshops with the music department and visiting performers are necessary or even worthwhile. As a Drama Major my opinion is that such events are very important to not only the University's students, but also the community around the University. Factors that one must take into account in deciding for oneself are such things as the role of these events in helping one's "cultural education", the role of a "cultural education" on one's total education, the role such events play in University-community relationships and the importance of these relationships, the role these performances have in developing Canadian Art and whether or not the University should take any part in helping to develop any of the above mentioned factors.

Has the Performing Arts Office contributed in any way to these factors? According to a report released by the Office, from May 1, 1974-April 30, 1975 this office initiated and/or administered:

- 30 performances by 21 companies or artists
- 11 workshop sessions
- 9 informal recitals by 6 artists
- 4 Vaghy String Quartet concerts
- 3 informal Vaghy Concerts
- 9 school Vaghy Concerts
- 9 Chancellor Dunning Trust events on behalf of:
- Festival Kingston Association:
- 11 performances by 8 companies or groups

Kingston Arts Council:
5 Art Markets
Kingston Olympics Public Events Committee

1 public meeting as well as providing the box office services for 14 events held by the Festival Kingston Association, 3 recitals for the Music Associates, 6 performances of two productions by McArthur's Theatre Arts department and also for 1 A.M.S. Concert.

We must then figure out if the committee's suggestion to allocate the Performing Arts Office's functions "to other departments" is a feasible one.

At present there are two people who constitute the permanent staff of the Performing Arts Office. Barry Cole and Bruce Chown who, with the help of assistants hired on short-term bases, put together the impressive list of last year's events and are presently working out a similarly well-rounded list of events for the year to come.

These two put in a full day's work on just contacting, coordinating and administering special series and performances. To allocate these duties to other departments would require hiring additional staff to do the required work, which goes counter to the mood of the report, or placing much more work on a staff that has already been cut back and has had work loads "reorganized and reassigned", or just letting the quantity and definitely the quality of the performances drop. None of the three seem practical or desirable.

What then about "increasing ticket revenues to a level that will support administrative costs?" According to Mr. Cole, the Office's administrator, ticket revenues already manage to cover around 50 percent of the Office's expenses. Mr. Cole also went on to explain why an increase in ticket price would not be advisable.

Roughly 60 percent of the 10,000 people who attended the performances sponsored by the Office were students. This figure is a very high percentage of any community to be attending "live professional arts performances". According to a recent survey, the average community attendance at such events in "Southern Ontario, excluding Toronto," is less than 40 percent.

Higher prices

The survey also went on to say that the average income for a person attending these performances is well over $16,000 and that the average expense, per person attending is already over $9.00. Any further increases in expenses would be financially discriminatory since this expense would be well beyond the financial limits of most students and middle to lower income families in Kingston and community. The report also goes on to say "that over half the population of Ontario feel that it is important to have accessible theatre facilities and that tax dollars should be used for that purpose." Kingston and area residents made up the other 4,000 people who attended these events, or the remaining 40 percent, thereby fulfilling a real purpose in the community, greatly aiding in the Queen's-Kingston relationship.

Mr. Cole feels that the Performing Arts Office does indeed serve a useful purpose not only for Queen's students, but also the general Kingston community. The question one must then ask is: if the Performing Arts Office is an important part of the Queen's community, and that "finding external funds to replace those from the University's budget" would be showing that the Office of the Principal does not believe that the University should be involved in such a project of cultural and community development; and that such an Office is not an important part of the Queen's community (which again goes against what I feel is the mood of this report and in particular, this paragraph), the question one must then ask is where should extra cutbacks be made to replace the funds expected from the removal of the University's support of the Performing Arts Office. These funds must be in the vicinity of the $32,000 that constitutes the average yearly subsidy from the University Administration to the Performing Arts Office. If this amount seems extravagant, you must realize that this Office is, as Mr. Cole called it, "a $90,000 operation of which the Administration paid only $32,000" and that next year's energy costs for the University will be in the area of some $1.5 million.

The final decision rests with the Office of the Principal, but the time to make comments and to discuss proposed cutbacks is now, not during the next school year. Principal Watts says in his letter to the Queen's community, "I hope that all members of the University community will study... (the report)... carefully, and make known to me their comments on the recommendations. It will be helpful to know the reactions of as many members of the University community as possible before the appropriate University bodies review the findings and determine the ways of implementing the objectives and recommendations set forth in this report". Many of the recommendations in the report start next September, so make sure you find the time to pick up a copy of the report and read through it carefully and if you should happen to have any questions, comments, or statements, be sure to speak out now, before all of the recommendations are implemented. Copies of the Report of the Principal's Committee On Financial Constraint are available at the A.M.S. Office. Get your's now since copies are limited.

Fantasticks: Almost That

by Alan Mann

Most people read reviews for either one of two reasons: to find out whether or not it (the play, movie, etc. being reviewed) is worth going to see, or to see what someone else thought of the performers' performance. This last group does not exclude the performers themselves.

If you are in the first category only, the answer is yes, do definitely go and see The Fantasticks. It is entertaining, fun, and quite enjoyable. All in all, watching The Fantasticks can be considered two hours well spent.

As a whole, the production was very well put together. Gavin Semple, the show's set and light designer, deserves praise for what he has managed to get on 'Con Hall stage: a simple set with a rather varied light set-up that works well within the play, and suits the moods of the play.

As for the performers themselves, my opinion varies. The fathers, played by musical novices George Pothitos and Barry Chamberlaine, were consistently humorous, in key, and light. The fact that George Pothitos is some twenty years younger than Barry Chamberlaine was no problem, and both came off as polished, experienced performers.

Further comedy was well supplied by Morison Bock as Henry, the aging yet undaunted Shakespearean actor and by David Lepp, Henry's side-kick and part-time Cockney Amerind. Sandra Aitken, who also choreographed The Fantasticks, took what might ordinarily have been a rather neglected role as the magical Mute, and created a definite personality with definite feelings to the strange goings-on.

The musically difficult role of El Gallo was played by Roger Dunn. It was clear that on opening night, Roger Dunn was perhaps not as musically prepared as he might have been. Quick runs were not as clear as possible, and the extended range required for the role managed to escape him a few times toward the end of Act Two.

Last, but as the saying goes, not least are Janet Snarr, and Dale Mieske as the young lovers, Luisa and Matt. Their past musical training and experience showed in their very well matched performance. In fact Don McKay and David Fanstone must again be congratulated for bringing together perhaps the most musically compatible "romantic couple" ever heard on any Kingston stage. The only problem presented by either of these two comes from Janet Snarr. It is somewhat difficult to imagine her as being the sixteen year old daughter. This difficulty, however, soon slips one's mind and the spectator is drawn into the magic reality of The Fantasticks.

AFS to negotiate collectively for aid

(CUP) Members of the Atlantic Federation of Students (AFS-FEA) will deal collectively with the federal government on the matter of student aid in the Atlantic provinces.

It was the decision to deal unilaterally with the federal government on federal matters of student aid bypassing the National Union of Students (NUS). In this area, their main concern is a re-evaluation of the means test which determines need under the Canada Student Loans Plan.

Other major areas discussed were ways of dealing with provincial governments and university administrations, requests for specific amounts of money for student aid programs in the region. This included a three-point proposal which the members agreed to work on and present to their respective provincial governments on a step-by-step basis.

When formulated, this plan and a request for an equalized amount of student aid for the region will, they hope, help obtain a uniform student aid policy for the four provinces.

Relations with the NUS were also discussed. A report on NUS by Bruce Russell from Dalhousie suggested that AFS affiliation with NUS would be advantageous to both organizations.

The AFS recently supported NUS in lobbying the federal government to support the inclusion of students on the Council of Education Minister's Task Force, dealing with student aid

NUS wants better aid program

Toronto (CUP) Improvements in Canada's student aid system and more openness in government decision-making concerning student aid will be the main goals of the National Union of Students (NUS) in the upcoming year.

This was the unanimous decision of the 75 delegates and observers representing 32 colleges and universities at the NUS annual meeting May 1 to 5 at Glendon College in Toronto. But whether the three-year old national union, the successor of the Canadian Union of Students which folded in 1969, will have a chance to carry out these goals depends on member and non-member campuses supplying the money needed by NUS to survive until next October.

Delegates at the annual meeting pledged $91,500 to keep the union afloat, but these funds must be received by July 5 or NUS will be declared "financially insolvent."

NUS President Pierre Ouellette of Brock University said that the main goal of the union was to "push for a more equitable student aid programme" which would involve a substantial revamping of the existing federal and provincial aid schemes.

He argued that a more equitable programme would help to break down the elitist image of the universities and allow a greater number of students from low-income families to attend post secondary education.

"More grants, less loans, and an adequate living income for all students" was how NUS general secretary Bob Buckingham summarized the policy adopted by the delegates at the annual conference. "Our society must be transformed into one in which full educational opportunity exists for all citizens," the report states, and the way to bring this about requires "a reformed student aid programme which does not require passive loans by the student, and which provides an adequate standard of living while in attendance at a post-secondary institution. The report also says that such a programme must be placed under federal jurisdiction if it is to benefit all Canadians equally. The present system allows provinces to vary their student aid criteria and differ in the amount of support provided.

'Douglas' motion sparks debate

by Sarah Yarnell

A motion which directed the Speaker of Summer Council to write a letter to Solicitor General Warren Allmand, and to Minister of Manpower and Immigration Robert Andras, expressing Council's strong disapproval of the impending deportation of Rosie Douglas, and asking that the ministers either define or withdraw the "risk to national security" label, sparked a good deal of debate at last Wednesday's AMS Summer Council meeting.

AMS External Affairs Commissioner Peter Lane, who proposed the motion, explained to Council that the only charge on which Rosie Douglas faces deportation from Canada is that of participating in a sit-in during the Sir George Williams University riots several years ago. Lane said that Douglas has been involved in work with the Black community in Canada, and with the prisons.

Rosie Douglas has spoken at Queen's on more than one occasion, the most recent time being two weeks ago.

Lane stressed that no-one has given the rationale behind the "risk to national security" label, which has been used as a basis for the deportation order. The chances of Douglas's survival if forced to return to his native country are slim, according to both Lane and AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) John Wilson.

This motion was put under strenuous questioning by Wilson's counterpart, AMS Vice-President (Operations) Ian Nordheimer, who wondered about the accusation that Douglas had advocated a violent overthrow of the Canadian government. Lane argued that this point was "not germane to the debate", and said that while Douglas was a Socialist, and politically militant, he had not been convicted of participating in any violence.

Summer Council passed the motion; Nordheimer recorded a negative vote.

The Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint was mentioned at the meeting by Wilson, who urged that Summer Council members spend a lot of time going through the Report. He said that some recommendations were out of order, as they concerned the allocation of AMS money which, according to Wilson, "the Administration should leave up to us".

He was referring to the section which suggested that the AMS review intercollegiate athletics, and decide whether any of them could be reduced or eliminated, with the student money which supports them being reallocated to other services. Wilson also lamented the recommendation to close the Queen's Counselling Service, which he felt was vital to students.

Wilson revealed plans for new University housing for 180-200 students, scheduled for completion by fall '76. A User's Committee for this project is now being formed, said Wilson.

What do you think Mr. Clench?... "It's not half as fun as figuring out an examination schedule!"

How to have fun in Kingston in the summer (see below). Agreed Bernie?

A Miser's Guidebook to Fun

by M.J.

It was a fine summer evening when I met two rather glum looking friends sitting on the steps of the Union. Why the frowns? There is, they said, NOTHING INEXPENSIVE and FUN to do in Kingston. 'No! I protested, 'This is just not so.' I promised to compile a list of FUN, CHEAP things to do. And here are my results.

If you are in a 'get away from it all' mood, pump up your dinghy and head over to Wolfe Island for a little sailing in the lagoons. Chasing fish in the marshes is a great sport unless you prefer to picnic on an island. After every hot voyage a thirst-quencher is an absolute necessity. The General Wolfe is a great port of call for a few brew but if you'd rather groove American Graffiti style, Ernie's Lunch is the place to go. Old Ernie makes the best butterscotch sundaes for $6.00 complete with old-fashioned cone-shaped cups. Turn on the juke box and you feel like your back in the old malt shop. Both these prestigious spots are on the main street of St. Mary's as you come off the ferry.

Now, perhaps culture is more up your alley. A visit and picnic to Bellevue House is fascinating. If you are a historical nut with a taste for something different, try some grave-rubbings. Kingston has a great selection of old graveyards as does Wolfe Island. Fishing Tom Sawyer style can be fun—unless you have to catch enough for dinner. A maple bow, some string, and a safety pin and you are in business. Speaking of dinner, why not a weiner-roast and wine-fest at Lake Ontario Park. Spend some time at the Amusement Park and try out the candied apples. They're the greatest! By the way, a new treat has appeared in Kingston. A close relation to the candied apple, it's the candied strawberry. This delectable goodie can be found at the Market in City Hall square. If you have the week-end and feel like camping, head out to the Gould Lake Conservation area near Sydenham. It's a terrific wilderness retreat.

Moving on to the party scene, a barn dance is a lively foot-stompin' way to celebrate Friday night. Put on your Deliverance album, form a square with four couples and you're set to square-dance the night away. A Virginia Reel adds a little variety to the evening. A Keg Party is a popular way to celebrate the summer. Kegs of beer can be obtained by calling the Cataract Street beer store. The beer costs $37.50 plus an $8.00 deposit on the keg. If none of these ideas catch your fancy, think of your own while sitting in the sun sipping, I suggest, a Glass of Winette. Why not? It's the cheapest. Bubbling white wine that I know of—four 13 oz. bottles for approximately $3.00. In any case, whatever you do, remember a Kingston summer can be FUN.

Anybody want an Arts student?

TORONTO (CUP)—"Liberal Arts: The Grad Recruiters Don't Want." That was the title page of the 1975 Employers Directory issue of CAMPUS magazine. With an economic system unable to absorb even the technically trained, the article raises such timely questions for the Arts student as:

—What do you do with a degree in History?
—What value is a bachelors in Sociology?
—How saleable is an English major?

The suggested answers are: suffer, nothing, and not at all. The article provides one choice bit of advice to the Arts student—"choose one course in economics or commerce no matter what your major, as insurance for the future."

Presumably the insurance provided is not that you would know anything about either subject. It would just give you something practical—sounding on your transcript.

The article also points out that the Arts graduate may be discriminated against in "blue-collar" work because the employer might feel the applicant is not seriously interested in the job and will not stay long.

In an effort to treat the symptoms without dealing with the causes, it suggests that liberal arts courses should be marked in university calendars by an accompanying red-typed boldface warning: "Choosing These Subjects May Be Injurious to Your Future Career."

University Council:

"The University and Governments"

The annual University Council meeting was held May 29-30 at the Donald Gordon Centre. On Thursday evening the Council—consisting of the Trustees, all Senators and an equal number of elected graduates—heard Ian Macdonald, President of York University and Governments', which was the theme of this year's Council meeting. The topic was discussed at workshops the next day. Deep concern was expressed about the future of universities in light of severe cutbacks in government aid. It was generally felt that this loss of aid reflected not just the poor economic state of society but also a questioning of the whole concept of and need for the university. Consequently much of the meeting was spent wondering where universities went wrong.

One common view was that giving too much money to the professional faculties had resulted in universities being too over-specialized and losing sight of their goal (higher education as opposed to higher qualification.) This coupled with the educational experiments of the '60's has created a public mistrust of universities. Lin Good, a member of the Ontario Council of Universities Affairs said, "Universities have not explained themselves sufficiently to the man who spends the money." She believes it essential that we do this and demonstrate that universities are "an indispensable prerequisite of civilized society" as Macdonald said in his Thursday night speech.

The possibility of a centralized board which would negotiate for all fifteen Ontario universities such matters as salaries, curriculum and class ratios, was not favoured by most present because of the feeling that it would destroy the "quality of education" and the "quality of life" at Queen's. In order to maintain Queen's distinctive reputation it was deemed necessary to preserve Queen's autonomy.

Several solutions were proposed that would help maintain Queen's 'quality of education' while still cutting costs. Ian Nordheimer, Vice-President of Operations for the A.M.S., suggested that faculty members be relieved from extensive committee meetings so they may dedicate more time to students and classes. Faculty Association President David Bacon agreed with this. One plan approved of by all was to apply pressure as citizens: assert our influence over the spending of public funds by writing letters to the government demanding that University aid be increased. Rector Bruce Trotter commented that students would become involved in such a public protest when financial cuts affected their present education.

A great tribute was paid to the faculty who, as one Council member said, have sacrificed so much in the cause of academic integrity and tradition.

This brick may or may not have been thrown through the window: we don't know for sure.

Investigative efficiency

Journal cracks big case

by ace staff reporter
Jean Bottomdown

A store on Princess Street was robbed, with a car chase and shootout ensuing, on Monday, around ten in the evening. Unfortunately, 10 is after office hours, so the Journal couldn't get the story then; but we, with our characteristic efficiency and determination, went out the next day to cover it.

By that time there were no witnesses left around, so we decided to do some investigative reporting on our own. Asking everyone we met "Are you now or have you at any point in time been more or less responsible, to any major degree, for last night's heinous flagrant affront to Truth, Justice, and the Canadian way?" Getting no answer to this periphrasis, we condensed our sublime and ethereal thoughts to this succinct phrase: "You rob the store?"

Replies to this were all negative, leading us to believe that the thief did not come from Kingston. This made us feel very good, to know that Kingstonians are still good and law-abiding citizens, MacDonald Park notwithstanding. We didn't check their stories, but we figure that they said so, and they ought to know.

By the time we got to the store to find out about damages and stuff like that it was closed, so we couldn't find out too much about that, but at least we tried. We looked through the window, and assumed that the thief had stolen the light bulbs, because it was pretty dark.

There was no snow, so we couldn't track the route of the car chase or anything, but we used our extensive information files to find out where Kingston car chases usually went, and investigated the area. Because of the rain, we couldn't tell if anyone was shot or not. We apologize for missing that. But we can tell that something got robbed from somewhere by someone

Constraint Refrain everyone joins in

WATERLOO (CUP)—The president of the University of Waterloo told a university Senate Committee May 6, "We must prepare for the worst, without panic."

The committee had gathered to review a brief to be presented to the Ontario Council of Universities Affairs (OCUA) to outline the desperate financial plight of the University of Waterloo.

The brief, prepared by university vice-president in charge of finances, Bruce Gellatly, models the effects the continued provincial government's cut-backs in education would have on universities until the 1980-81 academic year.

Gellatly told the assembly of Deans and Senate members the university might have to fire 60 faculty in 76-77 and a cumulative total of 137 faculty by 1981. The biggest cuts would have to be made in the 75-76 academic year when the 60 faculty might be fired.

Gellatly referred to a "2.1 million problem", the amount expenses will exceed income in 1976-77 unless the government changes the financial picture.

The Senate Finance Committee has been charged with the task of implementing the cutbacks needed to balance the budget. According to Gellatly, faculty cuts will not be the only result of the cutbacks. Others may include:

—cuts in paid sabbaticals for teachers;
—wages for university staff will remain lower than wages paid for similar work in the private sector;
—the budget allocation for repairs to equipment and facilities will be cut back to 35 percent of last year's total; and
—a subsidy which the university has paid in the past for parking will be eliminated.

LONDON (CUP)—Reports last winter that Western University's Student Council might incur a deficit of up to $40,000 have been proven incorrect.

Now it looks like the deficit will be closer to $55,000 and the Council appears to be heading towards financial stringency if not insolvency.

This was the message when David Pollock, the outgoing V.P. Finance, delivered his final report before retiring from office. Not only is the council headed for an overall deficit of $55,000, but it also has encountered an immediate cash flow crisis.

The student council owes a total of $20 thousand to its creditors and has only $5,000 in available cash to pay the debt. On April 21, however, short-term investment certificates held by the council fell due, alleviating the immediate crisis somewhat. But it is still in doubt whether the council will be able to operate effectively and meet salary costs until student fees arrive in October.

Summer salaries for executive members may be withheld entirely or executives may have to make do with a living allowance determined by the present council's ability to pay rather than past salary levels.

The new executive is embarked on a plan to revise its accounting system for next year, including an investigation of the possibility of computerized accounting coming to the rescue.

Former Western student council president Jeff Lawrence, however, says the deficit of his successors has nothing to do with accounting procedures or computers. He said in an interview from his office in Ottawa the financial activities of the past executive amounted to "total mismanagement of student funds."

He said there is "no excuse for the present state of affairs" because when he left office in the spring of 1974 the incoming executive was handed a $25 thousand surplus to work with, as well as a fee increase which netted about $30 thousand more than the previous year.

GUELPH (CUP)—The university of Guelph will admit 300 fewer students this fall compared to last, despite an increased number of applications.

The University cites lack of adequate housing and lack of lab space as the reasons for the cutback in the number of students.

But students who will not be able to attend are not the only ones at Guelph to suffer the results of the cutbacks in government financing.

No new faculty will be hired, salary adjustments will be less than cost-of-living increases, the library budget is to be cut, and computer services will be decreased at Guelph in the upcoming year.

AMS input to OFS

The Ontario Federation of Students seems to have matured considerably since last year. Notorious in the minds of many AMS politicians for its extremist policies, the OFS has for many years been questioned and at best erratically supported at Queen's in recent years.

Support from Queen's for the growing organization was apparent at last weekend's OFS annual general meeting held at McMaster University. Four members of the Queen's AMS attending the conference were AMS Chief Delegate to the OFS, Craig Brown; former AMS Chief Delegate to the OFS, Lyn Whitham; AMS External Affairs Commissioner Peter Lane; and AMS Vice-President (University Affairs) John Wilson. This delegation represented Queen's student interests well, and participated actively in the workshops and plenary.

Peter Lane presented a paper concerning the financial plight of Ontario health care students, who have to put in long hours of clinical work for little or no monetary compensation, as part of their training. Lane also put forward a motion which called for the formation of a Health Care students' caucus to gather information on their problem and to discuss strategy; the motion also directed the OFS Executive to communicate with James Auld, Minister of Colleges and Universities, and Frank Miller, Minister of Health, expressing disapproval of the intention to discontinue the Rehab students' summer stipend.

The Queen's delegation also presented a motion which had previously been approved by the AMS Summer Council, which asked the OFS Executive to express to Warren Allmand, Solicitor General, and to Robert Andras, Minister of Manpower and Immigration, their disapproval of the deportation of Rosie Douglas, and to request the ministers to either explain or withdraw the "risk to national security" label.

Queen's delegates were definitely trying to make OFS a stronger, more viable federation. It was apparent that this was also the intention of the other delegates, as on many occasions during the conference their concern for the future strength of OFS moderated their desire to make policy out of lofty and impractical ideals.

It is good to see that the AMS is contributing to a better OFS, for the federation is something students need right now. Credit is due the AMS Executive for following through on one of their campaign promises, that one which called for increased Queen's input into the OFS.

Feedback?

The timing of the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint could have been better.

Nobody's here.

The total enrolment at Intercession is but a fraction of the University's population, however it will be the regular students who will bear the brunt of the proposed spending cutbacks.

Surely if, as indicated by the Principal, feedback is desired from the people who make up the University, a delay until September would be appropriate. When the implications of the report have been explained to the students and the desired feedback obtained we should send the report to the Senate for debate - in September. Not this month.

During the summer only a handful of students will have input into the University's decisions on spending. How much feedback does the Principal really want?

We're waiting

We respectfully accepted the AMS Executive's response to the Pub editorial printed in last week's Journal; the letter from AMS Vice-Presidents Ian Nordheimer and John Wilson and AMS External Affairs Commissioner Peter Lane is printed opposite.

In fact, we're delighted to see some reaction to what appears in the Journal. It's good to see that it gets read, at least by a few people.

However, we are distressed to note that the AMS Executive chose to reply only to the Pub editorial and did not reply to any of the four editorials and one comment which focused on the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint. This document contains detailed and very serious recommendations on how Queen's can adapt to the tight financial situation caused by cutbacks in government funding of the University. The editorials on the Report were no less lighthearted, one urging the Committee to go back to the drawing board as they had failed to deal adequately with the issue of instructional processes. Surely, feedback on both the Journal's point of view and on the Report itself is vital in helping students form opinions on the Report's recommendations.

Perhaps the AMS Exec. has forgotten a few of their campaign promises, only four months after their acclamation. In the election statement they prepared for the 11 issue of the Journal, Gray, Nordheimer and Wilson pledged to only concern themselves with the Pub (the Pub is a service), but importantly, with political educational issues:

"In the past the AMS has too neglected its primary responsibility as a strong voice as the government of the students. The AMS must involve itself in controversial issues of political nature with long-term effects on students," said a campaign bulletin printed in the Feb. 11 Journal.

The Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint goes to Senate for discussion in a few weeks and the Principal has encouraged response in the Journal. Discussion of the Report will definitely appear in the pages of our campus newspaper. In an effort to feedback flowing, the Journal is asking to print letters, comments, and opinions concerning the Report. As leaders of the student government, the Executive have an especially important and vital viewpoint to offer on the Report's recommendations, one which students should be able to know and to understand.

Perhaps the Executive has forgotten their campaign promises. We hope not. We're waiting

Letters to the editors

AMS replies

At first I did not think that it was necessary to reply to this editorial. Then I was stricken by a feeling of indignation and resolved to present the other side of the argument.

The Journal is upset at the fact that no one in the AMS has replied to their editorials of last week. Have they considered the possibility that the editorials are not worthy of reply? No. Do they think that the only way to express opinions on issues is via their newspaper? Yes. Do they think that the AMS Executive has nothing better to do than sit around and devise rebuttals to the inanities that appear in the Journal every week? Apparently so.

The editors of the Journal are offended that neither Mr. Lane, Mr. Nordheimer nor myself have replied within a week. We will reply, but unlike the Journal we prefer to fully research the things we write. The executive will have comments on the report ready for next week.

We are sorry that we have bruised the tender sensitivities of the editors but we have better things to do than to dote over the half-baked theories that are purported every Thursday on the editorial page of the Journal.

Amalgamate

Dear editor:

How seriously has the idea of achieving economies of scale at Universities been investigated? Queen's is not unique in its financial situation. All campuses face the same Government decision to place universities on a lower priority for tax dollars. This being the case, should not Ontario principals jointly decide to allocate their collective resources for the maximum welfare of our post secondary education system.

For example, we could eliminate many of the administrative chores required to maintain individual faculties at all colleges by creating a major Ontario university for medicine, another for law, another one or two for engineering and so on.

This would allow economy in the purchase of textbooks, in supplies, fewer administrators and support staff to name but a few. It would also centralize the best professors in their respective fields for the mutual benefit of all students.

Why not? It certainly beats a poke in the eye with a sharp fee hike.

T. Collins

AMS comment

Dear Editors:

We would like to comment on your editorial last week entitled "Too Relaxed?" in which you accuse the Pub Management of allowing staff to drink on duty. We would like to point out that there is no basis in fact for this accusation. The Pub Staff drink only soft drinks or water while on duty and the rule against consuming alcoholic beverages while on duty is strictly enforced by the management of the Pub. In the future there has been any drinking going on in the Pub, it is without the knowledge or consent of the Pub Manager or the AMS.

Your accusation that there may be financial mismanagement as a result of drinking on the job is also without any factual basis. The daily cash reports have been extremely accurate, in fact, they have been far superior to past years' efforts in accounting for the Pub's performance.

Unfortunately, the Queen's Journal is continuing its past tradition of writing articles without any proper research being done beforehand. No attempt was made to talk over this matter with the Pub Management, the AMS Business Administrator, or the AMS Executive. The Journal would, it appears, prefer to smear people's characters rather than report the truth. We would suggest that if the Journal wants to discover financial mismanagement or drinking on the job, it needn't look any further than its own backyard!

Mr. DeLucia and Mr. Knox deserve the accolades of every student on campus for their performance so far. For a newspaper that cries continually about student apathy, the Journal is doing little to support those who choose to get involved.

Arts Office

Dear Editors,

Alan Mann has made some excellent points with regard to the future of the Performing Arts Office. I find it hard to understand why, with so much waste and activity of negligible value going on around Queen's, the relatively small subsidy to the P.A.O. seems one of the first to be slashed from the budget. The attractions it brings are available to the entire community at reasonable prices; besides, hearing the performances is an essential supplement to the B. Mus. programme.

The "solution" of higher ticket prices would probably knock most students out of the audiences, since despite the stereotype of the wealthy Queen's student there are still many who are trying to live on little or borrowed money.

Probably most of us have had the experience of defending or explaining how we live in Kingston by telling out-of-town friends that although the town itself has little to offer, the Queen's community actively organizes cultural events such as plays, concerts, films of high quality, etc. Many of these performances would cease with the collapse of the P.A.O., throwing us back on the scanty events offered downtown.

Also threatened are the free performances such as Ban Right Firesides, partly organized by the P.A.O., which improve the quality of residence life. The idea of scattering responsibility among various departments is sure to lead to increased bureaucracy, and duplication or disappearance of services.

If the university cannot find $32,000 for this vital service, students should and could do so without raising fees. Remember $20 levy we pay every year for athletics? Some of it, say $10, goes toward maintaining the Phys Ed Centre and operating inexpensive recreational skills programmes, which are clearly of benefit to all. The other $10 goes to support a lot of inter-collegiate teams which many students never care to see, and which, as an excellent letter to the Journal showed a couple of months ago, engage in an appalling waste of money.

Some students may wish to support these teams, but I'll bet there are 3,000 who do not. If we had a chance to opt out of supporting them, giving the money instead to the P.A.O., its subsidy could be met.

Arithmetic shows, however, that if 3,000 students did this we would be short about the amount of the Golden Words subsidy, which could be cancelled by referendum. A year ago, I for one voted to give it my quarter, but now I'd rather see

A View from here

by brian copeland

Back room talk in the university has long held that the Registrar's Office is the most inefficient department in the university. Apparently some faculties keep an additional set of students' records because they fear what might happen if the Registrar's Office was the sole source of information. The Journal's star columnist, Doug 'Bunny' Bonnell, recently told me of an adventure that he had in the jungle of Richardson Hall, when trying to obtain his marks. The kind young thing behind the desk told him that he couldn't have his marks for two weeks, and when he asked if she had his marks behind the desk, she replied, "Yes." Admittedly that is an example of bureaucratic red tape, and not so much inefficiency, but from most accounts, the Registrar's Office is both bureaucratic in a negative sense, and inefficient.

While AMS President John Gray is 'in absentia', Vice-President Ian Nordheimer

my 25c go to the Firesides.

The idea of opting in or out of parts of the student interest fee is not new, and is quite easy to administer. For instance, Tricolor and Concert Fees are already optional.

The issue of the P.A.O. is a good opportunity for students to show where our priorities lie.

has taken on the duties of Acting President. Mr. Nordheimer is also President of the AMS Corporation, a body which exists only in the mind of the law, and is for all purposes a convenient tool for an omnipotent dictator to seize control of a struggling student movement called the 'Alma Mater Society'. Once an active voice for the student body, the AMS has found its own continued existence to be sufficient cause for its life. We have had no 'Elmonds' recently, and it is unlikely that such concepts are to emerge from the AMS in the near future.

The stagnation of our student organization comes at a time when the university faces one of the greatest challenges in its long history. It would be best to read a eulogy to the AMS, bury our dead, and seek a new voice for the student body.

These comments, I am told, in no way reflect official AMS opinion, but are purely those of the author meant for public discussion by the university community

Terminal Blues

by K. MacLeod

I read a small notice in the obituary column this morning concerning the death of an old friend of mine, the English language. It seems the poor fellow finally cracked under the torture of long abuse and ran on his own sword crying

"Our enemies have beat us to the pit: It is more worthy to leap in ourselves Than tarry till they push us."

The Renaissance use of this declaration struck me as intriguing, so I took the clipping over to George, who is an old interloper possessor of a rapier wit. Rapier wit is George's own appellation, but there's no denying that he's a gay blade. I found him in his office, filling away a bottle of Kentucky bourbon under 'G', for Gullet.

"Maintaining a low profile, George?" I greeted.

"A low profile," said George sourly, "is what Toulouse-Lautrec had when he stood sideways. And I'll thank you to take your blaspheming mouth out of here. No, I take that back. Leave your tongue - there's somebody I want to flagellate."

I held out the clipping, but George dismissed it with a curt, peremptory wave.

"I already saw it," he said, "it's the crime of the century. The English language, dead! And only a week ago..."

"Maybe it's a case of mistaken identity," I suggested hopefully.

"No, he's dead alright. Dead as vaudeville."

"He was always a manic depressive. He was probably in a downhill phase and slipped himself out of it. Somehow, I never thought it would all end in suicide."

"Don't believe it," said George grimly. "Murder?"

"Absolutely." George stood by the window, his jaw working.

"Your jaw is working," I pointed out. "It won't be for much longer," he replied. "As of tomorrow it will be welded shut."

"But murder, George! Who would do such a thing?"

"His bastard half-brother, Bureaucrats. A marauding, cloth-tongued ape who doesn't know his ass from his ellipsis, but cunning. God, he's cunning."

"But why, George?"

"It's a plot," replied George simply. "A diabolical plot to reduce us all to idleness." "How, George?"

"Demoralization. Make a language incomprehensible to the people who speak it, and you reduce them to complete confusion. Divest a language of coherence, and you divest the people who speak it of logic, reason and sanity."

"But that's appalling!"

"Bureaucrats," said George, with a Callic or maybe it was a galled-shrug, "will stop at nothing. He is the Fu Manchu of language corruption. A semiotic funkier with heartburn. Call him what you will - he's vintage swine."

"Surely he can be stopped," I protested.

"No, it's too late. His henchmen are planted everywhere, carrying out his loathsome intrigue at every level of... hal!"

"At this moment Jeopards Peepers, George's boss, burst into the office carrying a portfolio of absurdist literature entitled 'Policy Guidelines As Recommended By The Joint Committee', etc. - it's pretty hard to take in a full page of title at a glance."

"George, old boy," he ejaculated, "I hate to tell you this, but I'm afraid we're terminating you."

"Pardon?" said George blandly.

"Terminating you, old boy. God knows, we deferred implementation as long as possible while endeavouring to seek alternative options that might mitigate against the apparent need for such drastic re-alignment, but George..."

"Yes?" said George.

"I'm afraid your position has been identified as being outside the parameters that define this department's specific integral function, and George?"

"Mmmmm," said George.

"It was a heartbreaking decision, but I'm afraid that the recommendation must be actualized. Believe me, George, this decision is based solely on the results of quantitative analysis."

"Do you mean," said George, with infinite serenity, "that you're giving me the pao socko?"

"George?"

"By the way," said George, gathering up his coat and moving toward the door, "did you happen to hear that the government plans to eliminate the 'u' in words like 'colour' and 'flavour' and 'raucous'?"

"Yes, George."

"Up 'u' s," said George, shutting the door softly behind him.

Play had problems

by Alan Mann

At the end of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, the narrator asks the reader to blame the author's lack of ability rather than his lack of desire for anything that the reader might have found wrong with the story. A similar type of grace should be given the Domino performers for their rendition of the musical version of this humorous poem.

Problems for the actors first became clear during the overture when the lead trumpet in Paul Chabot's 7 man rehearsal band, disguised as a musician, attempted to play the music assigned him, and failed. This, added to the fact that at best it is difficult to hear any performer over any musical accompaniment in the Grand Theatre, soon led to an evening of off key and many times, incomprehensible singing.

This is not to say that the entire play was a waste of time and money; there were several amusing and very good moments in the occasional places: for instance Richard Bronskill's Absalom, Ted Simonett's Nicholas or his Damian and especially Lloyd Wood's January. C. Alan Anderson was very consistent in the best suited role I've ever seen him portray, and Kathleen Roberts would also have been quite good, if she had not been drowned out by the group of seven during her big solo number, making her movements on stage appear somewhat humorous.

Further problems to plague the production were a set that had a habit of being somewhat awkward to "change", that required the set changers to spend much time trying to remove and re-adjust curtains, several times a little unsuccessfully, that made bringing props out a scene stealing affair, and that closed with an unneeded and definitely out of style "Cathedral in the Sky" a few lone deaf "singers" and one falsetto soprano with a habit of upstaging and a couple of story tellers with pronunciation problems.

Enthusiastic cast, but unprepared

Enthusiasm, however, was not lacking as the Domino players forged through problem after problem and did the best they possibly could. Most of the audience found most of the show quite enjoyable which does great credit to the authors: Chaucer, Coghill, and Starkie, and also to the more polished performers such as those mentioned above as well as Rita McGratten and Gerry Millar.

Capitol

Alice's House

by Sandra Bernstein

Alice is a pudgy, thirty-five-year-old suburban matron who waits on her boorish husband and daydreams of Robert Redford. One day, hubby is killed in a car crash. Alice sells everything and hits the road with her precocious son and the family station wagon, in search of her childhood dream of fame as a singer. Her move out of her married identity gives a title to the film, Alice Doesn't Live Here Any More, now showing at the Capitol.

Alice's road leads through a lot of humiliating experiences and seems to stop with a job as a waitress in a Tucson truck stop called "Mel and Rube's". The place killed Rube fourteen years ago, but Mel survives. Alice is told that she'll make more tips if she undoes the top button of her uniform.

As she gets involved with a local rancher (Kris Kristofferson), Alice has to reconcile conflicting facets of her life: her past and present, her independence and the love she has to give, her longings and limited abilities, her dreams and her reality. Just when she has been learning to live without a man around, lover David enters to demand a choice between him and her career Alice demands both.

Her problems, however, are given no simple solutions. The politics of the situation are nicely ambiguous, derived from personalities rather than feminist party line. Motivations, like ours, are not crystal-clear, but the characters seem real rather than being the fantasy-figures most films portray.

Ellen Burstyn, who plays the title role, conceived the movie, hired Martin Scorsese as director, and was involved with the script and production. Her aim was to help fill the desperate need many women feel for films about women: their lives, conflicts, and pressures. Alice is very rare in that it shows women as friends, not enemies, turning to each other for help when they are troubled, and letting their friendship provide the only warmth in surroundings that are often bleak and empty.

Similarly, after innumerable road films and movies about cross-generational pairs, Alice is the first (since Harold and Maude, I guess) with a female as the senior partner. In many ways, it is reminiscent of Five Easy Pieces, both in genre and style of direction. Scorsese has a lot of Rafelson's idiosyncratic work with camera and sound track, and particularly his love of Kitsch and the absurd. Despite several weaknesses, I would say that Alice works better "filmically" than, say, Diary of a Mad Housewife, (another film centring around a woman,) at least partly because of the strong personality behind it.

It succeeds also, however, because of the strong personality of its heroine, unique in recent film history for her warmth, maturity, and ambition. I hope all the Hollywood producers take a close look at the success of Alice. Doesn't Live Here Anymore, stop casting females as hookers and willing rape victims, and start making films that show people as they are today.

Soon: A Foot in Coldwater

A Foot In Coldwater. Even in an age where bands compete in coming up with unique names, A Foot In Coldwater stands out. However, the strange visions conjured up by this band's name are merely reflective of the music. A Foot In Coldwater produces; a hybrid of swirling organ heaviness with gnashing guitars and throaty vocals occasionally giving way to crystal pop statements.

The band's history is a long one, encompassing previously successful Canadian acts such as The Lords Of London (an infamous pop band), Nucleus (whose one album of intricate fire recorded in 1969 still stands up today) and Leather, a Canadian act which recorded a double album produced by Felix Pappalardi who still has the tapes.

The present lineup of the quintet came together in early 1971. The change of name to A Foot In Coldwater came shortly afterwards, which was followed closely by the band inking a contract with Canada's Daffodil Records.

An initial single, "(Make Me Do) Anything You Want", was a massive chart success in Canada and one cannot survive an AM Solid Gold Weekend without hearing the song a half a dozen times. A debut album and a followup single "(Isn't Love Unkind) In My Life", moved in the same vein, meeting with the same success.

Canada's A Foot in Coldwater

The summer of '72 saw the second A Foot In Coldwater album and a single culled from the album, "Love Is Coming", make their way up the Canadian charts. But, the time had come to make a move. Though A Foot In Coldwater enjoyed great popular success and because one of the few graduates of Canada's fledgling "star system", the band's collective sights were set on international acceptance.

It came with the third album, "All Around Us", the vital vinyl turning point, was recorded in Toronto and London, England and produced by John Anthony, producer of bands such as Genesis, Queen, Lindisfarne and Al Stewart. This, the third album, featured the previously mentioned hit singles re-recorded and remixed for the rest of the world, plus a wealth of new material. It was an enthusiastic Elektra Records which picked up the band for world-wide release on a five year contract. The album was released in November of 1974 and quickly became a heavy airplay item across the continent as well as introducing the band to European fans.

The tradition of great music which was established in the Mod-ish Yorkville area of Toronto in 1965 has finally reached fruition in A Foot In Coldwater. There is no limit to the band's potential. But, perhaps, they themselves expressed it appropriately on their very first album: Soulful music part of me

A Festival of Song

Festival Kingston Association and the Ontario Choral Society are presenting two choral music events this week-end. The first will be on Friday June 6 when the Ottawa Choral Society will perform at Grant Hall along with the Cantata Singers of Ottawa. Supplying the music for these singers will be the internationally acclaimed National Arts Centre Orchestra. Under the direction of Brian Law the singers will perform Bach's Cantata No. 21 and Mozart's Requiem K. 626. Tickets are $2.50, $3.50 and $4.50 with a fifty cent discount on all tickets for students and senior citizens.

That Sunday night, the 8th, also at Grant Hall, an amassed choir of 350 Ontario singers under the direction of the world famous conductor David Willcocks will add spice to the Choral in Contact conference being held in Kingston by performing Handel's Hallelujah Chorus and Zadok the Priest as well as works by Purcell, Brahms, Willan, Tallis and others. Musical accompaniment will be supplied by John Gallienne, organist and choir master of St. George's Cathedral. Tickets are only $1.50, $2.50 and $3.50 with the same fifty cent discount for students and senior citizens. The concert starts at 3:00 p.m. and the Friday night concert is at 8:30 p.m.

Emmanuelle

by Sandra Bernstein

I should have walked out of Emmanuelle the minute the heroine lets a near-stranger give her as the prize in a Thai boxing match, then arises from all-fours and announces to the crowd that she hasn't been this proud since she "first got the curse".

Unfortunately, I stayed with the other ten people in the Odeon last Sunday Night to view this French box-office blockbuster to the end.

An example of the film's subtlety is that it is set in Bangkok (get it?). It alleges to portray the sexual voyage of discovery of its lovely but insipid heroin as she enters an ennui-ridden group of French embassy wives. This it does with all the artistry of True Confessions magazine, and all the insight of a peep-show.

The film fails as pornography partly because the trusty Ontario censors have cut it down to a dreary pageant of women moaning and rolling their eyeballs. It is also at fault, however, in that (although the promos claim it "makes you feel good without feeling bad"), despite some erotic moments the sex is joyless: Erica Jong's "zipless fucks" without her grace and sense of humour. Any conversation is such a tedious pseudo-philosophical discussion of sensuality that we are reminded of Godard's take-offs on polemics.

Furthermore, the oriental setting lends itself to the film's delicate balance of racism and sexism. It is astonishing that this movie manages to portray a bisexual woman without showing any erotic shots of males. It makes one wonder at what market Emmanuelle is aimed: I suppose at males and lesbians.

In any case, the movie leaves us to ponder such topical and important questions as, "Doesn't anyone in that place wear underwear?" "Where on earth does he get a Porsche serviced in Bangkok?" and "Was Barnum right when he said 'There's a sucker born every minute'?" The producers of Emmanuelle suggest an answer to only one of these questions.

Marv Bloos

Farewell to a friend

One of Queen's most extraordinary students is leaving Queen's this month. Marv Bloos, a perceptive and provocative participant in student government, as well as an active leader of students in many other areas of involvement, has completed his law program and is going home to Regina to article.

A partial list of his contributions to Queen's student life includes: Floor Senior, President of Arts '72, President of the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society 1971-72, Alma Mater Society Education Commissioner 1973-74, Member of the AMS Board of Directors 1973-75, Chairman of the Tricolor Awards Selections Committee, Chairman of the Brockington Visitorship Committee, Residence Don, and notorious Journal photog-of-petty-girls.

Marv has already been rewarded for his efforts: in 1972 he received a Tricolor Award, and in 1974 he was awarded an honorary life membership in the Alma Mater Society. Both of these are great honors, conferred upon very few Queen's students.

Marv Bloos has been one of the best. He will be greatly missed.

Presentation to OCUA a waste of time

resources. A question like that is not easily answered in five minutes, yet that was the amount of time allotted. It is indeed regrettable that a body with as much influence and responsibility as the OCUA should spend so much of its time over such minor issues and devote so little of its attention to issues of the magnitude of the quality of education in Ontario, the real consequences of inadequate funding to the universities and the importance of removing the excessive and prohibitive financial burden placed on students from lower income groups. It was even more regrettable that the administrators of this institution were willing to let them avoid these issues.

Response to Constraint Report :

Comment

By John Wilson

AMS V-P (University Affairs)
As I sit down to write this article I have to wonder why I'm doing it at all. It is particularly agonizing to attempt to figure out what is superfluous and what is not. Principal Watts, I do not envy you. In fact one must wonder if anything at all is superfluous? The most important thing that must be remembered in any discussion of Financial Constraint is just why the Queen's community is going through this process. The reason is clear. King Billy who rules the fiefdom of Ontario suddenly decided that he was spending too much money on his ivory towers. He didn't consult anyone, least of all the managers of his towers. He just made a decision and that was that. Let's not forget who put us in this position.

Now down to the real agony - an attempt at comment on the Report of the Committee on Financial Constraints. First things first, the committee members are worthy of respect whether one agrees or not. Their task was not an easy one and they have performed nobly. This is not to say that I agree, only that I thank them for their display of courage.

In an analysis of the recommendations one could easily write a 20 volume treatise. At this stage that would not only be boring but probably useless. In this article I will deal with only a few issues and in a very general manner.

What would happen to Queen's if all of these recommendations were acted upon tomorrow? This question should be dealt with in two sections: 1) effect of the university in areas other than academics and 2) effect on the quality of education.

1) Effect on the Queen's Community
This campus now faces the prospect of becoming a very austere place to be. A community devoid of many of the facilities that give Queen's a unique personality. Imagine Queen's without such "frills" as the Division of Concerts, without the Student Counselling Service, without the Padre and with a smaller Career Planning and Placement office.

Will the university cease to be the cultural centre of Kingston? Will the people who need the services of Student Counselling and the Padre be left to solve their own problems? Will cut-backs in Career Planning impede the efficiency of that office at a time when career counselling is crucial? The answer to all of these questions seems to be yes. In terms of the whole such cut-backs could turn Queen's into an intellectual wasteland.

Attention must be paid not only to the quality of education but also to the quality of life.

2) Effect On The Quality of Education

This is one of the weak points of the report. Quality of education is mentioned only casually.

We intend to reduce staff by 70 professors. This has to have a major if not devastating effect on the quality of education. What is more appalling however is the method by which this recommendation is to be implemented. To not replace those who retire or die is to employ random selection in deciding which positions are expendable. There simply must be more thought given to the problem of who goes and who stays. The administration has an obligation to do some introspection on the matter of locating faculty deadweight and releasing them instead of employing the simplistic method of non-replacement. It is my personal opinion that the university can afford to cut back on some faculty and that some profts that are presently on full time salary can be paid only part time. Queen's has a reputation for employing good academic personnel and I don't want to see that end. Such a move would debase the value of a Queen's education. The use of random selection to reduce faculty also debases that education.

There are numerous other areas under the heading of academics that require strong comment but for which there are no simple solutions. Among these are the further degradation of the Library (can it get worse?) and the Computing Centre.

A university is built around a good library. Kill the library and you kill the university. Yet the report recommends that the casual salaries budget be reduced by 50 percent and that services be reduced. Along with these recommendations is the proposal that the acquisitions budget be increased to maintain buying power. What good is buying books if they are not readily accessible? Presently the library is inefficient, perhaps we should not try to save money at the expense of the library but rather attempt to increase effectiveness as a support for other academic areas that will be reduced.

This article has been pretty superficial by design. I have attempted to pose, in very general terms, some important questions. As one becomes more and more involved in the discussion of financial constraints one realizes more that there are no solutions, only compromises and decisions that compromise our position as an academic community. I hope that in future issues of the Journal I will be able to address some of the issues in a more specific fashion.

As a parting word I would like to offer a quote which was given to me by the Rector for the perusal of the Administration and the faculty. The quote comes from George Meany, President of the AFL-CIO, it goes: "You tighten your belt two notches and we'll tighten ours two notches." Mr. Principal, That's how the students feel right now.

The View From Here

by Brian Copeland

AMS Internal Affairs

The recent publication of the Report of the Principal's Committee on Financial Constraint has been greeted with a seriousness rarely felt in the university. 'When you strike at a man's pocketbook, you strike at his heart,' has meaning even in a community of rational scholars. Everyone is scurrying to protect his corner from the financial squeeze, without realizing that if, as Principal Watts would say the whole ship is to be saved, we must throw some of the cargo into the sea. The Committee has approached the problem on the basis that something must be cut, and working from there, they have provided the university with options that represent possessions of an affluent university. That is why such services as Student Counselling, Career Planning and Placement, and the News Department have been among the chosen targets of the Committee. You can dress a man in pauper's clothing or fine tweed, but the man remains the same on the inside. The community of scholars at Queen's will continue to survive, and even thrive without some of these additional services. The danger is that the politics of trying to keep what you have will emerge. Already, I hear rumblings in the corridors of learning that the Faculty will unionize in a protectionist move, and John Wilson of the AMS has committed himself to fight for the survival of certain student services. They are approaching this report as a battle ground, and a political one more than a financial one. Diversity is the last thing that we need in today's climate. Instead, we must cast aside these spasms of 'enlightened self-interest', and work as a community facing a common problem. Our unique strength at Queen's is our ability to survive difficult times with a feeling of hope and vigour for the future. We are a link in a chain that reaches back over 130 years, and that reaches forward to our children, and children's children, and beyond.

In a world of idealism that abounds at a university, we must face the realities of our own survival. Our search for the truth can only continue, if we are here to search for it. The Financial Constraints Report has given us options toward that goal of survival. Let us approach it with an attitude that benefits a community of scholars.

In transit - incidental meditations

by K. MacLeod

"Istigkeit," said Miss Shrike fervently.

"How's that again?" said George, rousing himself from a torpor that was causing him to slip, by perceptible degrees, under the table.

"Wasn't that the word Meister Eckhart liked to use? Istigkeit, is ness."

George and I had been drinking down at the Bar Sinister when cruel fate, in the guise of a shortage of tables, had thrust upon us the Dharma-Body of Miss Shrike. Miss Shrike was an intense young woman with a prehensile tongue and a retractable intelligence whose mission, it seemed, was to raise the general consciousness of the world by beating it into a coma of boredom. For two hours she had been outlining her general cosmology, which evidently couldn't be reconciled with the existence of her escort Luminger, since she ignored him completely.

"Yes," she sighed rhetorically, "to perceive the intense significance of things...transience that is yet eternal life...philosophically I am, as Miss Shrike rose with scornful majesty.

"Does that make you a bent Buddhist?" asked George, whose whiskey seemed to have gone down the wrong pipe.

Miss Shrike's features congealed slightly, but she rallied quickly.

"The raising of one's consciousness," she said firmly, "is the highest ideal toward which man can aspire. There are many paths..."

"I have one little exercise that I'm partial to," said George. "I expect a breakthrough almost any day now."

"Oh, do tell me about it," pleaded Miss Shrike, with a fervor that was not altogether ascetic.

"It consists," said George, "of raising a glass of Seagram's V.O. to my lips at short, regular intervals, white breathing shallowly and transfixing my gaze on the bosom of the barmaid. In this trance-like state I have known visions of ecstasy... Much more, I hope, will someday be revealed to me."

"As you say," remarked George, "there are many paths."

"George," said Miss Shrike, in the voice of one who is attempting to swallow a pineapple whole, "can it be that you have not yet understood my point?"

"I didn't know you were making one," said George.

"I want," she said, with stilled deliberation, "to dispense with the artificial poses of language. One cannot convey essences in words. I want to commune with the inner man. I want to explore your vision of reality, warped as it is. I want," she said, grabbing George's lapels and breathing hotly into his face, "to get inside your head."

"Humanity and I would be grateful," said George, delatching himself with difficulty. "It's your mind your own goddamn business."

Miss Shrike rose with scornful majesty.

"I had hoped you were finer than that," she intoned coldly. "I thought I had perceived in you an enlightened spirit. But I see now that your consciousness is about as radiant as a Jolly Green pea."

"Sorry," said George. "I guess I'm just a home-cooked hedonist."

hundred and fifty rupees to spend a weekend in a spill-level cave meditating on the transience of wealth."

"Poor old George," I said sympathetically. "So your consciousness is still in the mire, where it's always been."

"Ish ka bibble," said George bemusedly. "My consciousness was raised so high I lost touch with it completely. It just sort of slipped away from me, I guess."

"Why, what happened to it?" "I don't know. Someone found it floating in the Dead Sea and mailed it back to me in a plain brown wrapper."

"Bathetic," George said. "That wasn't the worst of it," said George ruefully. "It wasn't sanitized."

"Worse luck."

Three days in the lank made a hell of a mess of it," he said unhappily. "It shrank to the size of a bouncing baby lentil."

"Well, I can't say that I notice the difference," I offered by way of consolation.

"You adapt," he shrugged. "But, gee, I felt pretty bad about losing it that way. There was always this... this unspoken thing between us. Still, he said brightening, "I'm not sure that the world doesn't look better this way. And you know, I've been thinking. There may be a fortune to be made in therapy aimed at lowering consciousness..." A radiance, that can be described only as the glow of avarice, suffused his features. "I've got it all worked out," he said. "You start the ball rolling with a nationwide lecture tour. Do Anthropoids Have More Fun? and after that..."

"George, somehow I always suspected that beneath your gruff exterior there was a sleazy interior."

"Eccce homo," he said philosophically. "Behold the sucker."

Queen's in the sixties

A hot-bed of political activity

Queen's a hot-bed of political activity? Impossible, you say. I would have agreed a month ago. However a casual conversation with a former Queen's student of the 60's started me thinking otherwise. This friend commented on today's "American Graffiti" emphasis on Artsci jackets and beer: "It's quite a contrast to my days when quiet demonstrations were common, Artsci jackets an embarrassment and the Pub occupied only one room in the Union." Curiously groused, I decided to take a look at Queen's past.

It seems that 1969-70 was the year of "campus heavies" and public protest. Queen's joined the world-wide protest against the fall '69 nuclear test in Alaska by staging a demonstration on Wolfe Island. About one hundred students demonstrated at the International border handing out leaflets to those coming off the boat and at one point, Peter Griffiths stressed that the protesters were not long-haired hippie radicals but a real cross-section of the campus.

Queen's students continued their peaceful activities by joining in the Moratorium against war. A gathering of 150 students and professors on Jeffrey Terrace circulated a petition which they sent to President Nixon. One particularly enthusiastic student, Stefan Michalski, attended the Moratorium in Washington. The Journal carried the moving and poetic reflections of the events in a two-page spectacular.

One of the most intimidating actions on the part of the Administration was the report of the Committee of Presidents of Universities of Ontario which demanded expulsion for such undefined actions as "unacceptable activities" and disruption and obstruction of essential services. The report also outlawed "violence", a move which at Queen's anyway, turned out to be unnecessary. The most violent action during those days of unrest was a barrage of snowballs hurled by some rowdy Science '73 engineers at demonstrating Free Socialists.

Bloodshed was strictly confined to the Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic. The Clinic in the winter of '70 drew its highest attendance rate ever under the slogan of "bleeding for the cause". As the Journal of Feb. 13 expressed it, "A record of 1032 socialists, fascists and regular 'goddam college kids' bled at the Clinic at Grant Hall".

Jim Harding, Canadian Yippie, visited Queen's during February 1970 to explain how and why to start a revolution. He was part of the AMS-sponsored "teach-in" on youth and sub-culture and repression. There were some objections to such activities. As one student said in a letter to the Journal:

"The AMS is mis-appropriating student funds and misrepresenting the student body as a whole... Have the AMS ever considered a right-wing or conservative teach-in seminar or happening? I wouldn't mind hearing William Buckley speak or anyone else on the staff of National Review. What do we get? The Women's Liberation Front. American Imperialism. Jerry Rubin. It Can't Happen Here."

The biggest student political issue of the year undoubtedly was the Chuck Edwards affair. To this day the facts of the case are obscured, in spite of the public inquiry which was staged into the issue. Briefly and precisely as possible here it goes: Chuck Edwards, a grad student in Chemical Engineering, was involved in leftist politics on campus. Reportedly, the RCMP came to investigate Edwards' activities. Edwards learned of this through his graduate studies supervisor, Dr. Henry Becker, who apparently advised him to either curtail his political involvement or withdraw from the university. It's unclear to this day whether Chuck was being reprimanded for his low-marks due to neglect of studies or for his political views. Anyway, the Free Socialist Movement, of which Chuck was a member, made a national issue out of the affair by sending unauthorized letters on AMS paper to the media and other universities in Canada. The AMS, Principal Deutsch and the Engineering Society staged a hearing into the charges of both parties in attempt to determine who was maligning who. Several serious questions were raised by the affair. As one professor said in a letter to the Journal, "Clearly the issues raised are academic freedom and RCMP visits and student grievance procedures." Although none of these issues were solved by the hearing, it certainly aroused activist feelings. The FSM issued arm-bands and red with black buttons which stated "Stop RCMP, Stop Repression, Start a Free Society." The storming of the Senate by the "Edwards Defense Committee" took place on the last day of the hearing. The 50 demonstrators easily broke through the security precautions of 10 AMS constables. The whole thing ended clearing Becker of all charges and allowing Edwards to continue his graduate studies. Edwards decided to withdraw.

It was during the winter that the Journal became political. Throughout the 1970 and 1971 issues one detects shades of National Lampoon and Georgia Straits. Entire pages were devoted to protest against Agnew and Nixon. Reviewed were such books as Student Power and the Canadian Campuses. Releases from Liberation News Services were printed and included such topics as "Eldridge Cleaver on Education and Society" and "Violence is Part of the Canadian Way of Life". One article, written in underground newspaper style, warned of informers on Campus who would sell your name to the police if you were known as a dope-user. Even Flora MacDonald was portrayed as a radical. An interview with her was headlined in big letters: "At least up until now, political parties have been authoritarian and elitist." Rector Alan Broadbent was reprimanded by Law professor Monley Gorsky, counsel to the Chemical Engineering Department during the Edwards hearing, for "inaccurate reporting." In a letter to the Journal Prof. Gorsky said "I have rarely seen a more flagrant example of careless and irresponsible journalism. I therefore feel that you should publish a public apology by the reporter responsible."

But as it is with all things - good or otherwise - they must come to an end some time. Late 1971 saw the virtual end of radical movements on Queen's campus. It was perhaps best reflected in an article entitled "The New Queen's Spirit" which dismissed student activism in this way:

"Queen's had only a few months of left-wing leadership under the AMS presidency of Chuck Edwards. Leaders further to the right deposed him and began putting into effect a coherent platform which is still being carried out." And so here we are today, the emotion and turmoil of the Youth movement behind us. Are we any better off for all that happened? I wonder.

When they came for the Blacks,
You weren't a Black
So you said nothing.

When they came for the Hippies,
You weren't a Hippie
So you said nothing.

When they came for the Students,
You weren't a student
So you said nothing.

And when they come for you,
There will be no one left to say anything.

TUCKER
THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

An interview with a Revolutionary Marxist

Where did the Youth Movement of the '60's go wrong? Why have activist movements virtually disappeared from campuses? Hoping to find answers to such questions, I paid a visit to Pam Tucker, spokesperson of the Revolutionary Marxist Group (RMG) in Kingston. A few facts about the RMG: It is a Trotskyist group which advocates permanent revolution. The movement operates nationally across Canada and internationally in conjunction with the Fourth International. It recently sponsored the Public Forum on Racism and Immigration at Queen's a few weeks ago.

In Tucker's view, the activist movements of the '60's failed because they were basically apolitical in nature. The issues upon which students acted - such as anti-war and women's liberation were attitudinal, meaning that they were understood and of concern to only one group: students of middle-class background. The sphere of activism could not be extended from campuses into society because the issues at stake - women as sex objects as opposed to equality of wages - were considered "bread and butter" issues by the working class. Hence the movement died.

Were the goals of these movements achieved? No, not really, said Tucker. She cited Women's Liberation as an example and explained that International Women's Year is a joke because, although companies may hire a token woman to illustrate liberal attitudes, there is still no greater percentage of women with permanent jobs than before.

This is all part of the capitalist system, which Tucker explained depends on a reserve labour which it can call into service when the economy is booming and layoff when the economy is not going so well. It is this characteristic which is at the root of the present deportation of Haitians from Canada said Tucker. Canada's economy is in a depressed state and one way to solve this problem of excess labour is to deport the immigrants who were admitted to Canada when more labour was needed. Tucker said she believed it unfair that the poor immigrant should have to pay for the flaws in the capitalist system. The only solution is for people to politicize because the government cannot control capitalist corporations as they operate now.

When asked whether she believed that political activism would erupt on campuses in the near future, Tucker replied affirmatively, explaining that students will become active about basically economic problems, which as such are shared in common with the working class. Because of these common problems both groups will move towards the left in seeking solutions, eventually realizing that Marxism is the only solution.

Cutbacks in government aid to students and universities will encourage students to become politically active, Tucker believes. However she seems to doubt that such circumstances would force Queen's students to politicize. "On a campus of students from the second highest income bracket in Canada," she said. It seems the Pam Tucker knows Queen's well. She was a student here in the late '60's.

Considering that Kingston and Queen's are traditional bastions of conservatism, Tucker said she was very pleased with the response to the RMG. The group has held several study groups throughout the year which were well attended. The groups are in the form of an academic discussion. Members participate actively in activities such as demonstrations in addition to these study sessions. The RMG also publishes a newspaper, "The Old Mole".

An opinion

We are too parochial

The topic of student activism has been in my mind since the forum on Racism and Immigration two weeks ago. The Forum called for student demonstrations against deportations and Immigration Policy. I was surprised that such actions would be suggested at Queen's. Personally, I did not think that the response to the meeting was that great. There were perhaps one hundred people there. Organizers were pleased especially considering they said, that Queen's is well-known for lack of political interest. The question comes to mind - What would it take to motivate Queen's students to act on anything outside of our campus world? Our attitude - it is well-reflected in our newspaper and in the events we sponsor - is very parochial, concerned strictly with what we can get from the university and the community. There is little concern about the outside world - national or international issues. Granted, perhaps it is such attitudes that give Queen's its unique flavour of a small, internalized but active university community. Suppose something threatens the quality of life in that closed community. Would we then step out of our world in an attempt to right what was wrong? I am speaking, of course, about the reductions in aid to universities and the proposed constraint measures of the Principal's Report. A lot will change in the next year at Queen's - fewer student services, less library facilities, and cuts in teaching staff. Will Queen's students actively fight such actions? Or will we accept it all without protest, an attitude for which we are well-known?

Coldwater Astounds Kingston

by Ra
Eddie says, "It's a good thing the tickets are freebies, or I wouldn't be going."
Fred is supposed to be waiting for us at the stage door. "Knock, knock, knock." Some hunky security guard—"Around d'front, boys."

Makes you feel like a peasant. Eddie shakes his head and we truck around to the box office. The tickets come in handy after all, care of the Journal. With an expense account I could feel like Hunter Thompson.

We find Fred sitting on the sound console, looking like a roddie in his Electricanada-Foot in Coldwater T-shirt. Dave's sitting on the side of the console talking to a gathering of groupies, two of whom have thumbed all the way from Halifax to be with the band. Dave sees me coming and rolls his eyes. "We're with the band, man."

When 15 year-old groupie No. 1 from Halifax is mistakenly informed that I am working for the Toronto Star-jail bait-she wants to know if I can look over some reflections she's had of the town that she's written down. I'm about to ask her where they are, but think better of it. After all I do have a concert to review.

Trevor's way down at the back of the rink, under the influence. "I've got a title for your review," he rants. Foot in Coldwater Astounds Kingston Audience. Ha, ha.

The lights go down and on comes Bearfoot. All of the 16 year-olds are on their feet, applauding Blast, blast. What's missing is the draft beer and dancing. Two Kingston cops stroll around and you know they wish they were somewhere else. (Like backstage drinking beer-but more about that later.)

Trevor shouts above the noise of the band, "I paid $4.50 to get in here Rock and roll!!!!" Definitely for want of something better to do. Bearfoot performs a pleasing array of jazz, rock and rhythm and blues, but they are lacking in stage presence. A superb bar band, for some time to come, I expect.

The lights come on and we go for a stroll to check out the crowds. An announcement from stage: someone left their headlights on in the parking lot. Kingston hoppers stroll around to get an Orange Crush and a look in the mirror. One stops us to make conversation. "Know where I can get some acid? speed?" Except for the surroundings, the concert gives the feeling of a K.C.V.I. dance.

During the intermission, Bearfoot's equipment is taken off and Coldwater readies the stage. A lighting tree appears behind expressionistic tin-foil sails which adorn the stage. The middle front section of the stage tilts forward on hidden hinges, a private stomping ground for ex-California rocker and Coldwater lead vocalist, Alex Machin. A canvas cover is pulled back to reveal Danny Taylor's drums, centrestage and on an elevated platform. The lights go down.

"Ladies and gentlemen, let's have a warm Kingston welcome for A Foot in Coldwater." The spotlight swings into operation, bathing the audience in blinding white light. Machin, in darkness, pleads with the audience to come front-stage centre, and the Electricanada-Foot in Coldwater concert is underway.

Machin, a toned-down Freddy Mercury in black leather pants and red Mercury top says it all for the band. Loud. Canada A.M. sizzle. At two points during the entire set does the sound come together: once for meat and potatoes with their chart-busting "Make Me Do (Anything you Want)", and again when Paul Naumann, Coldwater's guitarist, delivers some solo licks.

There could have been good music at this show had the tour's sound engineers coped realistically with the horrendous acoustics of the Memorial Arena, home of the Kingston Canadians. Their answer to the had echoes was to turn up the volume. No more echo, but no more music either.

Coldwater is called back for an encore by the crowd of 1200 (their largest to date on the tour, including Halifax), but somehow I get the feeling that everyone just wants to go home. A Foot in Coldwater came back in overcharged, and overbearing, and the audience never caught up. This night will soon be forgotten.

I A.M. Fred and Dave get home after taking down the stage. "Man," says Dave, "was that ever a flat concert."

"Yea" complains Fred, "and as usual we were too straight. But what could we do? Those two cops kept strolling backstage. And then when Coldwater was on stage, we checked out the dressing-rooms, and found the pigs sitting down, ties off and shirts undone, drinking all of the band's beer, and using their handcuffs as openers. What a drag."

A sound of thunder. Venus. Rain forever. Bend back your neck, open your mouth and drown. Rock on you Kingston boogers. It's a good thing my tickets were free.

Garney Henley named as new football coach

Garney Henley, longtime player for the Hamilton Tiger Cats, will be the new head football and basketball coach at Queen's University. Principal Ronald L. Watts has announced. The position will become effective in the summer of 1976.

Mr. Henley, 39, a resident of Canada for the past 15 years, has worked for the past 9 years at the University of Guelph as intercollegiate supervisor, assistant to the director of athletics, head basketball coach, varsity football co-ordinator, advisor and lecturer in the department of human kinetics in the School of Physical Education.

As a professional football player with the Hamilton Tiger Cats for the past 15 years, Mr. Henley has played offense and defense, was ten times selected All-Pro and ten times Eastern All-Star. In 1972, he won the Schenley Award as the most valuable football player with the Canadian Football League.

As a physical education student at Huron College, South Dakota, Mr. Henley established an outstanding academic and sports record. He was given the title "Most Prolific Scorer in the History of American College Football" for his performance from 1956 to 1959 (394 points in 31 games), and was national leading scorer in the 1959 season with 141 points.

Mr. Henley was recognized as a superior performer in baseball, basketball and track and field during his college years, and was given the coveted Dean's Award for academic and extracurricular excellence.

At the University of Guelph, Mr. Henley has developed a football course and has coached intercollegiate varsity basketball, culminating in a national championship in 1974.

In addition to his duties as intercollegiate football and basketball coach at Queen's, Mr. Henley will be a lecturer in the School of Physical and Health Education.

Mr. Henley will succeed Frank Tindall, who will retire in the spring of 1976, after almost 30 years at Queen's.

In commenting on the appointment, Principal Watts said: "Garney Henley's excellent credentials, both in teaching and in sport, will be a valuable asset to the University. In selecting him to succeed Frank Tindall, whose long service to Queen's has been widely and warmly recognized, the Advisory Committee for the Appointment of the Head Football Coach has made an admirable recommendation."

Queen's, Hotel Dieu agreement provides student accomodation in upcoming year

The top three floors of the Jeanne Mance Residence of Hotel Dieu Hospital will house Queen's students for the academic year 1975-76, according to a joint announcement by Eric Brown, administrator of Hotel Dieu Hospital, and Russell J. Kennedy, vice-principal administration of Queen's University.

The residence, which was vacated when the hospital's nursing training program was discontinued in 1973, now has offices on the lower floors.

One hundred rooms on the fourth, fifth and sixth floors will be made available to the university for student accommodation this fall with Queen's taking responsibility for all operational costs. Students will pay a residence fee for the individual rooms following the procedure for all Queen's residences.

The residence will be designated for male first year students, the group in most need of additional housing. Two dons and a warden will also live in the building.

The one-year agreement is "an outstanding example of co-operation on the part of the Hotel Dieu Hospital for which Queen's students and administration are most grateful", said Vice-Principal Kennedy.

The Jeanne Mance Residence was built in the mid-1940s and was first occupied in the fall of 1948. At that time it had only two storeys; later floors were added in 1954. The building contained classrooms, laboratories and two dormitories in addition to bedrooms. The residence is named after the first white woman to set foot on Canadian soil, in 1642. Jeanne Mance was the nurse for Ville Marie, the early Montreal, and died at age 67 in 1673, the year Kingston was founded.

Senate recommends free tuition for seniors

Senior citizens may soon be able to take courses at Queen's without paying tuition fees. On June 26, members of Queen's University Senate unanimously agreed to recommend that the Board of Trustees approve exemptions from payment of tuition fees by persons aged 65 years and older. In order to register, seniors must qualify for admission under the various policies of Queen's faculties. Also, they "should not normally expect to gain admission to courses or programs where restricted facilities limit the numbers which can satisfactorily be accommodated," according to the recommendation.

Teleclinic: some questions and answers

"I just arrived in Kingston and need a dentist."

"I was just wondering how to go about getting a prescription for birth control pills."

"I have got to get a chest x-ray and tuberculin test done in order to get this job you know..."

"I have just arrived in Kingston and I think I may be pregnant. I don't have a doctor, where can I get a pregnancy test done?"

"I need a dentist. One who can accommodate my wheelchair."

These are a few examples of what is going on at TELECLINIC.

What is TELECLINIC?

Teleclinic is a telephone service which deals with problems of a medical or health care nature. It operates 9-5 weekdays and noon til midnight on weekends, by medical health students at Queen's.

The service that Teleclinic provides is of a threefold nature:

Primarily it is an information and referral agency which helps members of the Kingston community sort out the bewildering matrix of health care services we have here in Kingston and helps the caller contact the most appropriate agency or person for his particular problem.

The second major function of Teleclinic is to educate the caller, in lay terms, in various aspects of common medical and health care problems. Obviously, legal and educational limitations prevent the dispensing of medical advice over the telephone.

The third function of Teleclinic is to counsel and provide reassurance for callers in distressing situations.

Who uses Teleclinic?
Any resident of Kingston. Who pays for Teleclinic?
The AMS and Opportunities For Youth.

The number at TELECLINIC is 542-6420.

New socialist group underway in Kingston

A group of Kingston residents have been discussing the possibility of a new, independent, community-based socialist organization. One of the aims of socialism is the reorganization of society along more cooperative, less competitive lines. We cannot even begin to accomplish this if socialists remain as isolated from one another as they are currently. The first step toward reorganizing society is necessarily to organize ourselves, and this is why we propose founding the KINGSTON SOCIALISTS.

As an initial means of getting together, we will be having a picnic in City Park at the foot of Barrie Street on Saturday, July 12th between noon and 4:00 (in case of rain, the same time and place on Sunday). The aims of the picnic are to enable people to make the acquaintance of other socialists, to discuss a proposed statement of general principles, and to consider some possible community political education and action projects. For more information call Dave Porter or John Cavley at 544-0627.

On the Wednesday following the picnic (July 16th) there will be a meeting to found the organization at 8:00PM in St. James Church, 10 Union Street West (just west of Barrie Street).

TM group

Growing influence at Queen's

submitted by S.I.M.S.

There have been many groups and clubs that have come and gone but it's interesting to ask why one group, the Students' International Meditation Society, has continued to have a growing influence in the life of Queen's University. The S.I.M.S. group teaches what is known as the Transcendental Meditation programme or just "TM" for short. The group also claims to have over 500 people on campus during the regular school year practising the technique of TM twice a day.

The TM programme is taught according to a procedure developed by Maharishi Mahesh Yogi, the founder of the Science of Creative Intelligence. It involves a simple mental technique which allows the nervous system to become more orderly while the individual experiences the pure field of creativity and intelligence at the source of the thinking process. Simultaneously, the body gains a profound level of rest, which is said to be tremendously valuable in clearing away the stress and fatigue of activity. The sustained result of this increased orderliness brought about by the regular practice of TM is the improvement of life in all its aspects: physiological, psychological, sociological, and ecological.

The benefits of TM now seem to be very well documented in hundreds of scientific studies. Some of the research shows a dramatic drop in the metabolic rate during TM, increased orderliness and synchrony of brain functioning, improved psychology, improved academic performance, improved resistance to disease and improved athletic performance.

This development of the individual is experienced in day-to-day life as more intelligent and perceptive thinking, more creative and effective action, greater accomplishment and success as a result of one's actions, and consequently a sense of fulfillment and profound satisfaction in life itself.

Benefits of the TM programme don't stop with the individual. The more orderly influence created in the lives of meditators has its effect on the whole of society. One per cent of the population meditating is enough to change the trends in society and make them more positive. This is confirmed by statistical studies conducted on numerous cities around the world whose meditating populations have reached that 1 per cent level. It was this, along with the growing amount of other research on the TM programme, that prompted the Maharishi to inaugurate the "Dawn of the Age of Enlightenment" earlier this year.

It used to be that people started TM for their own personal benefit. This is still true, but more and more, starting TM and continuing to be regular in the practice can be looked upon as a social responsibility. The TM programme is one thing we can do to achieve maximum good in our own lives as well as promote maximum good in the whole of the environment and the whole of society. TM is something real and it works.

If we go by the experience of people in the past, it seems like TM should really be taken seriously. For those interested there will be an Introductory Lecture on TM tonight in Stirling Hall room 412C at 8:00pm.

Apathy

Dear Editors,

Queen's students, and I'd even go as far as saying, the entire 70's generation between ages 18 and 30, are extremely apathetic. Nothing good, in this world, just happens. Students should be told honestly and concisely what is happening with this constraint business. All I read is a lot of repetitive garbage. Universities have long been able to afford sloppy and inefficient management due to large cushioning support offered by the government. Universities have been too long wasteful, irresponsible, and blind to priorities in budgeting. I suggest here that this is the deeper motive of the government in holding back funds - to force the universities, basically public-supported businesses, to spend those tax dollars wisely.

I really don't see anything for the 70's generation to go over the deep end fighting for though. I do think that anti-democratic Bill 22 in Quebec should have caused enough protest to cause its terms to be moderated. Seeing Queen's isn't in Quebec any protest from here would have been ignored. But for such a bill to just suddenly be law, it's frightening. Nobody gave a damn, I am assuming you know of the details of the bill I am speaking of. In any case, I have only used it as an example of apathy, by the people and by the students. I believe it was a lack of awareness. People were railroaded and the consequences won't be felt for another 10 years or so, and then, will there be a protest?

I feel it is the Journal's responsibility to voice comments and editorials on National and international events in as honest a manner as possible. If we can't get honesty from other sources, let's print it in our own paper, the Journal.

Mark Emanuel

Shortsighted

Dear Editors:

I've been away from the Journal less than three years and you reach a milestone: putting out an issue with a masthead that doesn't list one person I've ever met. I feel very ancient. Thank you for keeping my name on the mailing list; I still enjoy the paper and feel some connection with it, and cherish a hope that if I ever dropped in to the office on press night I'd still be allowed to write or edit something.

But what I'm really writing this letter about (and you can use the following paragraphs as a letter-to-the-editor if you like, though I wouldn't bother if I were you) is your editorial "Focus misplaced" in the May 29 issue.

To say that the Financial Constraint report "ends where it should have begun", because it talked about saving money and not about teaching methods, is to say that there is only one subject which people are allowed to think about, and it is curriculum evaluation-revision. All the things you list are very important, of course, but they aren't what the financial constraint committee was supposed to be looking at, and so it very properly didn't look at them.

Clarification of the university's objectives, introduction of new teaching formats, instructional development centres, and so on may well be good ideas, but in the first place they will take time to do properly, and in the second place they will cost more, not less, money than what Queen's is doing now.

By contrast, the financial crunch with which the committee was supposed to be dealing is a relatively short-term phenomenon. If the problem isn't dealt with inside twelve months, it isn't going to matter a damn what longer-term improvements may come along - the university won't survive to see them!

You might as well blame an ambulance driver for not giving follow-up care.

Chris Redmond

Tricolor pics

Dear Editors,

Some summer school students have been inquiring about having their pictures in the Tricolor of their graduating year. Sheets of information were available at registration, but many people undoubtedly missed them.

The official, and only, Tricolor '76 grad photographers are Cameron Sparks Photography. Their studio is at 275 King St. E., and their phone number is (613)-546-1925. Questions should be addressed to them about costs, appointments, or any other inquiries.

A cry for help

Dear Editors,

This missive is being written to you as a cry of distress and with anticipation that you will publish it in your paper. I am a 27 year old male and a prisoner in the State of Ohio. The need for constructive correspondence has arisen in me, and under these circumstances it is a must in order for one to bypass the negative pitfalls of this environment.

I would gladly answer all letters which might come to me via your paper and would greatly appreciate any assistance

Letters

The Summer Journal wants to hear about readers' ideas, criticisms, problems, views, etc. Letters should be sent to The Editors, Queen's Journal Office, Students' Memorial Union. The Editors reserve the right to edit letters, and in most cases will only print those which are signed by the writer.

In the good old summer-time

Dear Editors,

The annual arrival of summer school students signals the end of spring, and the beginning of summer romances. Even the professors are taking up wife swapping again, and those that don't wife swap but do have an air conditioner in their home, watch out, because the chances are greater that your wife will get pregnant than if you lived in a non air conditioned home. At least that's what a Los Angeles study pointed out. Single professors have left campus in search of beaux, and so that leaves only us students.

A student's summer is composed of beer, and breads, not necessarily in that order, but all the same, necessary. One only needs to relax at the Pub to find both, and in plentiful supply I might add. The amount of exposed female flesh is at its peak on these hot summer days, and the male constituency at Queen's is enjoying every square inch.

The university takes on a peculiar atmosphere during this season of the year. One of laziness, dreams, and anti-intellectualism. The staff finds life a little less demanding, and the students think only of the holidays yet to come. It is a good time around this school of sturdy limestone. There is a pervasive feeling of relaxation, and a want to take life just a bit slower so that every minute might be savoured.

There is no hurry in our steps, except as we trudge, tired and thirsty to the Pub. And there we find the plump high school teacher mixing with the tanned student, enjoying a beer or two, telling a few stories, and assessing the evening's crowd.

To-morrow brings another day of school or work, but the end approaches quickly, and we smile, secure that in our dreams and in our daily lives, Queen's is a good place to be in the summer of '75.

QUASSA

Volume 3, Number 1, Thursday, July 10, 1975

QUASSA is published by the Queen's University Summer School Association and is independent of the Queen's Journal and the Alma Mater Society.

Editor: George Fowle

May third minutes

Time: 10:45 am

Members present: Karen Bradley, Bob Patterson, Kathy Murphy, George Fowle, Bob Hawley, Marina Hughson Barry Boal, Tony Burger, Linda Chandler, Les Chandler, Les Robertson, Lee Ewles and Ross Wardle.

Motion No. 1 moved by Kathy Murphy, seconded by George Fowle that the secretary's report be accepted as read. Passed. Treasurer's report: As of January 1, 1975 we had a balance of $1,875.87 with an outstanding debt of $700 to the Queen's Journal leaving a balance of $1,175.87.

Motion No. 2 moved by Linda Chandler seconded by Barry Boal that the treasurer's report be accepted as read. Passed.

Motion No. 3 moved by Tony Burger seconded by Bob Hawley that the books be audited by A.W. Tyos. Passed.

A discussion with AMS representative Ian Nordheimer evolved regarding our position to Interscholar Students. Ross Wardle pointed out that many of these students commute for night classes and therefore are not able to participate in social activities on campus. Ian reported that AMS is in favour of remitting $1.90 of the $6. student fee to QUASSA if we want to offer some programme for these students. It was also noted at this time that according to a questionnaire distributed to these students the service deemed most desirable was the extension of the bus service. The following points were discussed and Motion number 4 made. The AMS has a working contact with the public transit system already it would therefore be easier for this student body to negotiate an extension as none of the QUASSA executive lives in the city.

Motion No. 4 moved by Barry Boal seconded by Linda Chandler that the AMS and QUASSA meet during the summer session to assess and evaluate the existing programme and come to some sort of final agreement as to the jurisdiction of the Interscholar Student Fee. Passed.

Ross Wardle offered the assistance of the Extension office in publishing a questionnaire which is to be circulated to the Interscholar Students for evaluation of the programme offered by the AMS. The Pub is open for both the Spring and Summer sessions.

Ian Nordheimer assured us that the AMS would be agreeable to having QUASSA students act as constables at our social events. There will be a list for people to sign at registration and will be presented to Ian Fraser, the chief constable.

It was suggested that the Social Convenors check with Bob Webb for assistance in obtaining liquor licenses.

The AMS suggested that QUASSA pay $35 per student to help defray the cost of publishing the Journal during the Spring and Summer terms. It was noted that according to our questionnaire last summer the majority of people like the QUASSA in the Journal.

Motion No. 6 moved by Bob Patterson seconded by Les Robertson that we allow the $35 per summer school student be allotted to AMS for publication of the Journal during the summer period. Defeated.

Discussion of motion No. 6: Barry Boal would like to see a flat rate (ie. $1000) which could be negotiable, to subsidize publication of the Journal during the summer period, rather than paying $35 per summer school student. Faculty Board Representative Report: Bob Patterson attended all the meetings; however there were no significant changes made this year. The meetings were unusually quiet this year.

Directory: Motion No. 7 moved by Bob Hawley seconded by George Fowle that we do not publish the Directory for 1975, but that we duplicate the information sheets handed out at registration last year. Passed.

The pros and cons of publishing the QUASSA independently were discussed.

Motion No. 8: that we publish the QUASSA in the Queen's Journal. Passed.

Motion No. 9: Moved by Barry Boal, seconded by Tony Burger that a flat rate be negotiated and paid to AMS to cover the cost of publishing the QUASSA in the Journal and subsidizing the Journal for the summer term. Passed.

Sports: Tony Burger reported that Bert Boodram will not be attending summer school this year therefore we have one position on the sports committee vacant. Volleyball: Tuesday and Thursday evenings, Bews Gym. Basketball: Monday. Badminton: Wednesday (tournaments). Softball: cancelled this summer due to insufficient interest. Table tennis: tournaments possibly. Golf: those interested should turn their scores in to Tony Burger by the end of the fifth week.

Social Report:

Wine and Cheese Party: Wed., July 2, Victoria Hall

Boat Cruise: Wed., July 9, cost $3.00

Dance: Tuesday, July 15, Grant Hall

Beer Bash: Wednesday, July 23

Annual Meeting: Wednesday, July 30

Motion No. 10: moved by Barry Boal, seconded by Les Robertson, that we break for lunch (12:30). Passed.

Re-adjourned at 1:30.

Our function at registration: we will have a table at registration to hand out information sheets to include library schedule card and sports schedule. We will also have a list for the signing of constables.

Mr. Cross is to be asked to assist us with the distribution of these information packages at McArthur. These packages will also be available at the Summer School of English registration.

Registration will be from 9am to 5pm and QUASSA executive will work in shifts.

The Summer School of English students will be required to pay the $2.00 student fee and the principals will be required to purchase an Associate Membership Card.

These cards will be available at our first social event. Ross Wardle will send a letter to the principals advising them of these conditions on gaining admittance to our social events.

The Association for Part Time Undergraduate students is offering a Conference May 23-25 at the University of Toronto.

Motion No. 11: moved by Barry Boal seconded by Linda Chandler that QSSA meet the expense incurred by Lee Ewles to attend the APUS Conference May 23-25, 1975. Passed.

Ross Wardle suggested that the Bursaries be reviewed during the summer and this might be an item of business for the Annual Meeting. Some of these courses are no longer offered at summer school. Should these be changed or eliminated in order to increase the amounts offered in other fields. These prizes are awarded for academic standing.

Motion No. 12: moved by George Fowle seconded by Linda Chandler, that mileage be paid to members travelling to this meeting at the rate of $15 per mile. Passed.

Motion No. 13: moved by George Fowle, seconded by Kathy Murphy that the meeting be adjourned. (2:05 p.m.) Passed. Next meeting July 1 at 7:30 p.m. at the Department of Extension.

From the President

On behalf of Queen's Summer School Association, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome all students who will be attending Summer Session 75. For some, this campus has become a second home, while for others it is just a temporary stomping ground. I trust you have all enjoyed a relaxing year and are ready to joyfully accept the rigours of the Summer School programme. It can be assured that both the social and educational aspects will keep most people busy all the time.

Please take the time to drop in at the following events:

Dance July 15

Beer Bash July 23

Annual Meeting

and Dance July 30

All Summer School, Faculty of Education and Summer School of English students are asked to present ID cards for admission. Guests and members of the Principal's Course are required to purchase an Associate Membership Card to gain admission to all social events.

Although the main function of our elected Association is to fulfill the social needs of the students, it also publishes the weekly bulletin QUASSA and assists in the administrative functions of the University which pertain to the Summer School Student. Please feel free to contact any member of the executive if problems arise. Your suggestions and advice regarding University life will be gratefully welcomed. In closing, I hope that this summer is not only a profitable and enjoyable experience. Good luck and good learning.

Lee Ewles

Then

Mr. Wardle in his address to Summer term students has outlined changes that have taken place mentioned the directions being considered for the future. Looking through a copy of Queen's Summer School Association's publication I came across an article titled "Another Objection Varies". The following is reprinted from the 1924 QSSA publication.

I will not list the 1975 costs, all know those. One should know, however, that there are "wonderful possibilities for summer enjoyment".

The question of where to leave your car has been settled. The original intention of the University was to reserve the areas closest to residences for conference purposes and have Summer students use the school lot north of Union Street. Many people objected to having their car so far away. The objections were brought to the attention of the University by Lee Ewles. The result of the enquiry made is that Summer students are to be guided by the signs found in the parking lots on campus.

The supposedly high cost of summer course at Queen's has been one of the reasons why many students from the West are not attending. Many people look at the cost of a university course, prohibitive, forgetting the adage, "Where there's a will, there's a way." For those who have been hesitating on account, and to the many who be with us in 1924, I submit a statement that should cover average student's expenses.

Room and board for six weeks at Kingston	.....
University fees	.....
Registration for new student	.....
Tutorial Fees for two subjects	.....
Summer School fee	.....
Less half tutorial fees paid	.....
Pro Tanto fee for new student with 10 credits	.....
Matriculation allowance	.....
September examination fee	.....
Two subjects	.....
Books - average cost	.....
Incidentals	.....
Total	.....

To this add the cost of transportation to Kingston.

How many teachers go through the two months of summer vacation on less than $150? Not many, according to my experience. An interesting part is that you are advancing academically while you are having a real holiday. Where in this book you may read about the wonderful possibilities of summer enjoyment. You return your work in the fall refreshed, intellectually advanced, financially surprised at the opportunities of Queen's Summer School.

Welcome

On behalf of Queen's University, may I extend a sincere and hearty welcome to the 1975 Summer Term.

You are attending the 66th summer school of Queen's University. It has been claimed that Queen's has the oldest summer school in Canada, but not surprisingly the University of Toronto has questioned this distinction, suggesting that our traditional rival offered courses a little bit earlier than the summer of 1910.

There were 24 students attending the first summer school. For 60 years, the enrolment grew quite steadily, reaching a peak of almost 2,000 students in 1971. Since then, the number of students attending has declined to approximately 1,400 in 1974 and, I expect, about the same number this year.

There have been changes other than growth over the years. In 1955, in conjunction with the Department of Education of Bermuda, Queen's University began offering courses in Hamilton, Bermuda each summer. Last year, two courses were offered on an experimental basis in Belleville, and this year courses are being offered in both Belleville and Brockville during the regular summer term. It is expected that course offerings will be increased in these centres over the next few years.

For the first time, two courses are being offered this year in the evening beginning in the first week of May and ending on the last day of July. Classes meet twice a week. With such scheduling and a term of approximately 12 weeks, it is possible to offer a wider range of courses and provide much greater opportunity for reading, tutorials, preparation of assignments, and reflection and absorption of material. Moreover, offering courses in the evening during this period means that it is practical for a much wider section of society to attend.

Despite the increased number of offerings and the increased variety and places in which the courses have been offered, enrolment has recently been falling. You may wonder why. There are a number of clear and easily identifiable reasons. In its early history, the Queen's summer school drew students from all over Canada, and indeed the Summer School Association, which dates back to the inception of summer school, had official provincial representatives from coast to coast, with Ontario divided into five regions and all the other provinces represented as well. Today, with the establishment of many other universities in Canada, and particularly with the establishment and expansion of new universities in Ontario, students do not come from so far afield. Secondly, with a university degree now a requirement before one can begin teaching in the primary schools, there are obviously fewer teachers coming to summer school.

The Faculty of Arts and Science has recently published a working paper based on studies of the courses and enrolment in the Department of Extension. There has already been some positive and imaginative response to some of the material and recommendations in this report. With such an over-all review of the opportunities for part-time study in the Faculty of Arts and Science being undertaken, I would urge each of you to let me have your comments, suggestions, and remarks about anything pertaining to the summer term or indeed any aspect of part-time study in the Faculty. Please come and see me, telephone, or drop me a line.

With the narrowing geographic base, with many students living off-campus and commuting from long distances, and with students taking courses off-campus, some of the social and athletic activities of the older summer schools have declined. Before our greater affluence and increased car ownership, students tended to stay in residence and on the campus during the week-end. Thus there were more activities, and perhaps a closer bond and more fellowship. Your Summer-School Association executive has again worked hard during this past winter to organize and offer a good program of social, cultural and athletic activities. One activity seems to have remained popular from the beginning and that is the boat cruise. It is mentioned in the very first issues of the Q.S.S.A. Bulletin published at least as early as 1917. Fifty years ago the bulletin contained a picture of the cruise boat with the following notation:

"One item in the program of social activities that few students want to miss is the moonlight excursion among the beautiful Thousand Islands. It is held on a Friday night when the moon is full."

In large measure, it has been the spirit and concern of the students that has made the summer school of Queen's University what it is, and given it such a distinctive reputation. In looking over the records, one is struck by the involvement and activity of the students in summer school. I urge you to keep up this fine Queen's tradition, to support your Association and your executive, and to help the University community make summer school a better, continuing operation.

and Summer School

Now at AE

The Agnes Etherington Arts Centre has three new exhibits in its galleries. The first is a display of tapestries and screen prints by Fernand Leduc called Les 7 Jours. Leduc was encouraged to make cartoons for tapestries, and the result was these seven works. Leduc, although born in Montreal, has spent most of his life since 1950 in France. The tapestries were woven in the Pinton-Felletin workshops of Aubusson, a town that has been a tapestry weaving centre since the middle ages.

Leduc has worked in vinyl colours, in flat areas of warm, deep and resonant tones. The wool was dyed especially to correspond to the colours of the silk-screened cartoons, and each tapestry revolves around the variations of a single colour.

This exhibit lasts until the twelfth of August.

Also on exhibit are forty-four works by the well-known Canadian artist, Ken Danby. Danby is perhaps best known for his designs of Series III of the Olympic Coin Sets, a proof set of which will be on display through the courtesy of the federal Information Services.

The exhibition includes lithographs, serigraphs, watercolours, and paintings in egg-tempera made between 1963 and 1974 and chosen by Walter Moos, and continues until August twenty-fourth.

The third exhibition is a strange mixture of Canadian and Scandinavian themes from the past century. The painter, Blair Bruce, was born in Hamilton, Ontario in 1859, studied at the Hamilton Art School and in the Academie Julian in Paris, married a Swedish sculptress and founded an artists' colony on Sweden's Island of Gotland where he died at age 47.

The exhibition has been

The Phantom Hunter: Blair Bruce

organized by Joan Murray, Director of the Robert McLaughlin Gallery, Oshawa, whose interest in Bruce's work climaxed during a vacation in Sweden when she was able to complete arrangements for the loan of more than half the paintings shown from the Brucebo Foundation, established in Bruce's home in Gollands Fornsal, Sweden. These works have never been seen in Canada before, and some relate to works in this country, such as the many sketches for the Smiths, the canvas in the National Gallery of Canada, also included in the exhibition. The well-known painting, the Phantom Hunter, inspired by early Canadian folklore, from the Art Gallery of Hamilton, will also be shown.

Bruce's training in France had only a peripheral influence, more important was his association with a group of American and English artists from 1882-1885 in the village of Barbizon, where they lived in the house of Theodore Rousseau.

In 1885, with funds running low, Bruce returned to Canada, suffering the severe loss of about 200 of his paintings in the wreck of the steamer Brooklyn at Anticosti. He returned to France in 1887, joining a painting settlement at Giverny. In December, 1888, he married Caroline Benedick, a Swedish sculptress, who, with her own academic and musical background provided a climate of artistic and emotional support in which he created some of his strongest works. They established their home at Visby, Sweden, which now houses his work and his library. His widow also established a fund, from the sale of some of his work to Canadian galleries, known as the Brucebo Scholarship, awarded annually to this day, to a promising young Canadian artist to encourage Canadian-Scandinavian relations.

Today, Thursday the tenth, Joan Murray, organizer of the exhibition, will give an informal talk on Blair Bruce and his work, in the Art Centre. Bring your own sandwich; coffee will be provided. The exhibition continues until August 12.

Nader-struck Hockey Puck

Dryden to establish public interest group

TORONTO CUP — What were seven university student council representatives doing June 12 meeting with Montreal Canadian goaltender Ken Dryden?

The meeting was called by Dryden to explain why he wants $10 per year from every student in Ontario, and to let it be known that he's going after the money whether the student reps like it or not. Queen's Alma Mater Society Vice-President John Wilson attended the meeting.

Dryden wants to establish Public Interest Research Groups (PIRG's) on university campuses throughout Ontario. PIRG's are the brainchild of American consumer advocate Ralph Nader, and Dryden's proposal follows that model closely.

The idea is that students would pay a fee at registration and that money would go to PIRG to engage in research and lobbying "in the public interest". But the main problem, according to those who attended the meeting, is that the organization would depend solely on student contributions, and no-one seemed too enthusiastic about another fee hike.

Wilson told the Journal that the group should try to get money from others too.

Another objection to Dryden's plan was that, although local campus PIRG's would have a student board, the research and lobbying goals would be set independently of elected student councils and other student groups.

Dryden conceded that "PIRG may work on behalf of student interests and against them the next," which did not win much sympathy from the reps at the meeting.

Others objected on the grounds that the proposed PIRG's were based too closely on the American system of lobbying which would have little effectiveness in Canada.

Executive and staff members of the Ontario Federation of Students at the meeting expressed concern with Dryden's statement that PIRG would contribute to the university "by providing the taxpayer, in publically supported schools, with visible tangible benefits" for their tax dollars.

They argued that students rejected the idea, which the Ontario government has been voicing, that universities were worthless institutions draining away the taxpayers' money.

OFS representatives also questioned the idea that a board composed entirely of students would be able to legitimately define "the public interest" and said it ran counter to the efforts of OFS and other student groups to build common fronts with other community organizations.

The opposition, however, was not unanimous. Jacques Leduc, student president at the University of Ottawa, became the sole supporter of the Dryden plan, and said before the meeting concluded he would take the fee hike proposal to his "Grand Council" right away. He termed a student referendum on the $10 fee increase "unnecessary."

Wilson told the Journal that he would not have a referendum at Queen's unless Dryden approached Outer Council with the suggestion, at which time Council would debate whether to hold the referendum.

Other reps opposed the Dryden proposal, but some said they did not want to dismiss the idea entirely and formed a committee to work with Dryden on a revised plan for setting up

PIRG's.

There was some concern at the end of the meeting as Dryden implied he would ignore student councils who opposed the PIRG plan and go ahead in his attempt to organize PIRG's on each campus, forcing unsupporting councils to hold referenda.

Dryden told one of the students after the meeting that PIRG would enlist the support of such drawing cards as Robert Redford and Harry Chapin in his PIRG fee campaign, not to mention the draw which hockey puck Dryden himself could muster

IWY info unit at shopping mall

Does it seem to you that Ontario's participation in International Women's Year will bypass communities like Kingston? If so, you should visit the Ontario government's new Information Unit in the Kingston Shopping Centre. These units have been set up in 20 locations throughout Ontario to provide information on issues affecting women, and the project is jointly sponsored by the Women's Bureau, Ministry of Labour, and Experience '75, the Ontario government student program.

Staffing the unit are three Queen's students, Ruth Reyno-Campbell, Jo Ellen Walker, and Kaye Fraser. They will not offer counseling, but will act as on-the-spot information and referral agents on a variety of government and non-government programs and services available to women in the Kingston area. The students will also work with community and women's groups in Kingston. In response to requests they will assist in organizing and promoting special International Women's Year activities and events.

The information service will be available until August 31. The unit has no phone, but a telephone service has been arranged for every Wednesday between 8am - 12 noon. If you are unable to visit the unit at the Shopping Centre, call 549-5471 at the times listed above, and one of the unit staff will help you.

Besides acting as a useful service for the Kingston community, the unit staff hopes to provide significant feedback to the various government ministries on the needs and concerns of Ontario women. The success of this depends on community response. What are the biggest problems for women in the Kingston area? You tell us!

Student Pres urges support of NDP

WATERLOO (CUP) — Student president John Shortall is asking students at the University of Waterloo to vote NDP in the upcoming Ontario provincial elections, expected to be held in the fall.

Shortall feels the NDP offers students "the best deal" in education policies and has a program for post secondary education which is "very similar" to that of the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS).

The Ontario NDP has endorsed the demands of OFS for an elimination of tuition fee payments and the payment of living stipend to all students. But the provincial student federation rejected a motion to back the NDP campaign at its annual meeting in Hamilton earlier this month.

Although OFS and the NDP may be united on educational policies they are not in agreement on everything. OFS fears the NDP might reverse its policy stance by election time to woo the middle class vote to any decision to support a party in the election was left up to individual student councils.

Shortall, who was elected to the executive of OFS at the conference by an overwhelming majority, argued that OFS should endorse the NDP to provide leadership to students. But he was unsuccessful in persuading the delegates.

Health care caucus meets here

Almost twenty health care students from Ontario universities and community colleges are expected to be at Queen's on Saturday to attend a health care students caucus meeting sponsored by the Queen's Alma Mater Society (AMS). The first meeting of its kind to be held in Ontario, it was proposed by AMS External Affairs Commissioner Peter Lane at the latest conference on the Ontario Federation of Students.

Lane, who is a fourth year Meds student, suggested that the caucus be formed so that problems common to most Ontario health care students could be discussed, and solutions proposed. The most pressing problem when the caucus was founded was the impending withdrawal of the $37.50 weekly stipend paid to Rehabilitation students during the time spent practice training in the hospitals.

Since that time, however, health care students have expressed interest in discussing education in the health care field. Lane told the Journal that it has been "kind of exciting" that so much enthusiasm about the health caucus has been displayed by students.

Representatives from the various health care programmes offered at the Universities of Western Ontario, Ottawa and Toronto and at Queen's and MacMaster Universities are expected to attend Saturday's meeting. Also expected are students from Fanshawe, a community college, as well as observers from other Ontario community colleges.

The caucus will meet throughout the summer and fall, as well as at OFS conferences. A type of OFS committee which will report to OFS conferences, the caucus has not been designed as a pressure group, said Lane.

Students in the fields of medicine, nursing, nursing assistance, dentistry, lab technology, mental health and rehabilitation therapy are among those who are members of the caucus.

OFS calls for strong student action in elections

GUELPH (CUP) — Calling the upcoming provincial elections a primary focus for student organization, the Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) has called for the establishment of political election committees (PEC) on university campuses in Ontario.

At its executive meeting in Guelph July 11-13 OFS devoted much of its time to a discussion of the next election campaign and the strategy the provincial student organization should follow not only before and during the election but also after it has been decided.

The committees would exist not only to ensure that students are enumerated in large numbers but also to promote awareness of the implications of the election in relation to future educational priorities.

Two of the three major political parties, have already indicated that, if

This hostel, referred to by many as a summer home for Johnson Streets and is occupied by members of Science44 wayward youth, is located on the corner of Brock and Co-op during the academic year.

Student unemployment rate up

OTTAWA (CUP) — Figures released on July 15 by Statistics Canada show that the June unemployment rate for students of post-secondary age is up 66 per cent from the same period last year.

Of the 253,000 students in Canada between the ages of 20 and 24 intending to return to school in the fall, only 190,000 (75.1 per cent) are listed by Stats. Can. as at or seeking employment "in the labour force."

Of these, 165,000 are listed as "employed," while 24,000 are considered unemployed.

This 12.6 per cent unemployment rate for June of 1975 compares with a 7.6 per cent rate in June of last year, indicating that the unemployment rate for students of post-secondary age is up about 66 per cent from last year.

According to a Stats. Can. spokesman, the student summer employment survey considers anyone who has worked one hour or more during the survey week to be "employed" for purposes of the survey.

The news for students between the ages of 14 and 19 is worse. Of the 650,000 persons in this category considered "in the labour force," 97,000 or 14.9 per cent are listed as unemployed, compared to an unemployment rate of 10.4 per cent last year.

The unemployment rate for students compares with a June unemployment rate of 4.1 per cent in Canada for persons over 25 years.

This discrepancy led Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield to accuse the federal government of fighting inflation

"on the backs of the young people of this country" the day the figures were released.

He said in the House of Commons the bad news will have a "discouraging and embittering effect" on young people. Stanfield claimed the Minister of Finance "chose to fight inflation" by creating unemployment among young people.

Prime Minister Trudeau replied "I cannot believe the leader of the opposition weighed his words when he said the Minister of Finance made a choice."

Housing in bad shape

WATERLOO (CUP) — Students at the University of Waterloo are going to have a much harder time finding housing this year, says UW housing director Carl Vinnicombe.

And to make matters worse, it has been predicted by a local apartment owners association that rents will increase by an average of 25 per cent this year.

Students looking for houses and apartments to rent will be surprised to hear that landlords are asking for two to three months rent in advance. One local landlord is asking $500 a month for a five bedroom house and wants $1,000 before the tenants can move in.

Many landlords are withdrawing their housing from the student market. President of the Waterloo Region Apartment Owners Association, Tony Bergmeir, said he has found students to be among the worst tenants, as they have little regard for the private property of the landlords.

Publicity for the "tent city" set up by the students' federation last year drew over 100 offers of rooms almost immediately. Local ministers also helped out by announcing from the pulpit that students were in "a real jam."

Guelph admin, student gov't lock horns

GUELPH (CUP)—Negotiations are continuing between the University of Guelph and its student union to determine whether fees will be collected for the union when students return this fall.

The university Board of Governors decided July 3 not to collect the fees, alleging the student union had violated its Letter of Agreement with the university by failing to produce a full audit in 1973-74.

But the students argue that a full audit was impossible because the university had control of the union's financial records during the first three months of the fiscal year, and were later received by the union in a state of "shambles," according to the financial officer Kathy Robins.

And the lawyers for the student union, have advised that a "full" audit for the first year was not a part of the 1973 Letter of Agreement at any rate.

Student president Bill Gray feels the university's decision not to collect the fees may be due less to the alleged audit infraction and more to the university's stated desire to re-negotiate the Letter of Agreement in its entirety.

The Agreement, he said, has been a "pain in the neck" for the university since it was signed because it gives students full control over space allocated for their use, including the space occupied in the new University Centre building.

The university wants to see the Agreement revised so that students groups have to abide by administration rules which will prevent the council allocating space without going through administration channels of approval.

Last August there was a flare-up between the council and the university when the latter allotted space for use as an alternate "free school" the university didn't want on campus. The Letter of Agreement hampered the university in its attempts to throw the school out, and the school stayed against the university's wishes but with the approval of the student council.

Another outstanding sore point between the students and the university is that the student union is still adamant in pursuit of a $1.4 million breach of trust action against the university over student monies aid to construct the new University Centre.

The student union sued last year after a student referendum overwhelmingly supported legal action to reclaim the student monies. The students argue the university did not honor earlier agreements as to how the money would be spent, or who would control the building after completion.

Gray, who has been urging campus groups not to organize to oppose the university's action against the student council, says the administration has agreed to continue to recognize the student union while revisions to the Letter of Agreement are negotiated in August.

Laurels to all those involved in getting the Senate to recommend to the Board of Trustees that senior citizens be given free tuition. They will certainly make a fine addition to Queen's enrolment.

The move, however, could have interesting repercussions on life at the old Alma Mater.

For example, Saga foods may have to introduce milk toast to its menu.

The Grease Pole event during Frosh Week may have to be shortened to 47" and be secured by thumb tacks instead of beer caps.

The Queen's Pub will have to add a few Harry Lauder records to the juke box.

Lights out in the residences will be reinstated, at 7:30.

Tubbings will become splashings.

Bingo may replace the Science Formal.

Washroom graffiti will make fun of MacKenzie King.

Who knows what else will happen?

We may soon have the first intercollegiate lawn bowling team in Ontario.

Dear Editors:

I would like to make a brief comment on your article regarding the Jeanne Mance Residence (Journal July 10, 1975).

Thanks are in order to Vice-Principal Kennedy for helping to provide this extra, much needed housing. However, sincere gratitude should be extended to Mr. George Wattsford, Director of University Services. Without the work of Mr. Wattsford the additional 97 beds may just have been an idea mentioned at a committee meeting instead of becoming a tangible and positive influence on the student housing situation.

Thus, for the students, I would like to thank Mr. Wattsford for his work.

Kingston Socialists

by Norman Maynard

A group of ten Kingstonians have started a ball rolling which may have a considerable effect upon the local political scene. Proposing a "broadly-based, non-sectarian socialist group committed to political work in Kingston", the group has achieved surprising support. A working-paper was presented to twenty other socialists during an informal gathering on Saturday, July 12 in City Park. The paper was also discussed at a more formal meeting on Wednesday, July 16 at St. James Church. Over forty people at the Wednesday meeting voted unanimously to found a new organization. The name of the group is the Kingston Socialists. The new group claims that they are not a political party.

The working paper outlined the need for such an organization. According to the paper, Socialists in Kingston have been isolated and have lacked a body through which they could "channel" their activities. The Waffle experience in the N.D.P. makes it "uncertain" the paper states, "whether a significant left wing can be effective within the N.D.P." The Waffle were forced to disband as an entity within the N.D.P. The working-paper sees the various Marxist groups as "divided on issues of theory and practice which are important in themselves, but which do not all seem of immediate relevance in the Kingston situation." The need was felt for a locally-based operation.

A traditional danger threatening the political left has always been that disagreements over theory would lead to the splintering of parties and organizations. This may occur with the Kingston Socialists. The members recognize the problem and have stayed away from discussing doctrine. Their emphasis is more on practical attempts to better the lot of Kingston's working man.

The members noted that the Kingston Socialist membership is largely middle class and from Queen's. At least five members of the University's faculty belong to the group. They are conscious of the problem they may have in getting working-class membership and of understanding the problems of the working man. This is why they want "to provide regular political education." This would go both ways, with the workers and middle-class members hashing over problems.

Despite the problems the future of the group looks good. Any local organization that can attract forty members in a city that had polling stations during the last municipal election recording as few as one or two votes, does show promise. It is also good to see members of the University community becoming involved in the city.

Opinion

by John D. Wilson

During my "political" career I have been involved in a number of election campaigns. When I started out in 1968 I felt a great excitement in the electoral process but now as I grow old I find that that excitement is tempered by a rising feeling of disgust.

This disgust began to grow in the summer of 1974 as I watched the federal election develop in front of me. My optimism began to wane when I realized that the election was being fought on the grounds of practicalities and counter-punches as opposed to creative leadership. It would seem that there is a poverty of hope in Canadian politics at this time.

With the impending Ontario Provincial election this disgust is reaching its height. The Davis government insists on butting up the electorate with pedestrian giveaways that obscure the fact that this government represents only its own best interests. The opposition parties offer no alternative preferring to run on the above-mentioned counter-punching.

The Conservatives are saying to themselves, "We'll fool the voters with goodies then when we get our majority back we'll really stick 'em." Nixon and Lewis are demonstrating their lack of creative intelligence by insisting on attack instead of innovation.

Let's examine one of the government's giveaways, the sales tax rebates on automobiles. Who wins and who loses? The really big winner is the automobile manufacturers. The government's move will fire up the demand for cars and increased profit will flow to General Motors, Ford and Chrysler. A small winner is the consumer who buys a car before December 31. On average, he will be $160 in pocket. The other winner is the conservative party itself. They will get the support of the people they fool and of the powerfully influential automobile manufacturers. The losers will be institutions that depend on government dollars to operate. Institutions that will be hurt will likely include the university as Davis will be able to point to a smaller tax bill and say once again "We all have to exercise restraint, unless you're Henry Ford III."

In 1971 Davis took a firm stand against the Spadina expressway, a stand I supported. He openly opposed the proliferation of automobiles that threatened the quality of urban life. Now, five years later Davis tells us to buy a car and the government will give us $160. It becomes increasingly clear that this government doesn't run on leadership but rather on political expediency. Davis is the big villain in this trend but I must honestly admit that I can't see Robert Nixon or Stephen Lewis as being any better.

This leaves me, and you if you agree, in a quandary. Who can we support in the up-coming election? My mind isn't firmly made up but more than at any time before I am considering the destruction of my ballot in a small and unheard protest against the intellectual poverty of our political "leaders".

A Challenge

The greatest percentage of Summer School Students are teachers. Very often teachers are at a level of education, from elementary schools to Universities are persons who have never left school. Most leave one institution of learning as a student to enter another institution as a teacher.

One of the hazards of an occupation is people becoming wrapped up in the universe of the job, no matter how large or small that may be, that they forget the significant events occur outside that universe. Some have difficulty involving themselves in outside interests.

Regrettably, when making acquaintances at Summer School very often the only common element is one's job and, therefore, is the subject most easily discussed. If you are a teacher, would you be able to refrain from talking about teaching or education for a twenty-four hour period? Try it! The experience could make for an interesting game.

Graduating?

If you are graduating this year and wish to have a graduate portrait taken you should arrange for a sitting in the very near future. Tricolor, the year book of Queen's University, has one official photographic studio from which it will accept portraits of graduates. Having one studio ensures quality control and that each picture is within consistent printing specifications.

If you are planning a graduate portrait you should contact Cameron-Sparks Photography at 275 King Street East.

That seed is nestled deep in the dark,
Moist womb of love.
Safe and secure from the thrust and passion
That gave it being.
[Oh my God I despair!
My child will never know the sunlight
Or breathe the Springtime air.]
That little seed, our baby,
Will know the surgeon's knife
Swift, sharp,
Scraping him from his soft home of love.
Shrieking pain, excruciating tears.
Death, blood and guilt
An agony for years.

My body is full and round
Ripe like the harvest
My skin is golden wheat from the sun
My milk-white breasts are large
With soft brown nipples to suckle my young Brown like the earth,
Rich like the harvest
I am in tune with the earth.
That heartbeat of joy within me
Surges below my heart.
Look at my roundness,
Gaze at my fruit.
I am Eve,
I am Earth-mother
Creation: Me.

You caught me unprepared
When you touched my hand today
It was unexpected
That love should come my way.

I was surprised by joy
And bewildered by your love
But it's a sweet confusion
I cannot surfeit of.

I'd like to be a marble angel
Wings poised to fly.
I'd like to be as cold as stone,
A snowflake in the sky.
I'd like to have a heart of glass,
To be aloof and high.
But, like Lucifer I've fallen,
And how was I to tell
That being warm and loving you Would give me only Hell.

Annual meeting and dance

Wednesday, July 30 is the date set for the Queen's Summer School Association's Annual Meeting and Dance. You are a member of Q.S.S.A. You pay for the activities of the Association; you are urged to attend the meeting as well as the dance.

If you are interested in participating in planning the activities of the Association, contact any member of the present Executive Committee. The summer social and sports events require people to get them organized; interests of students and their legitimate complaints need spokesmen. These are some of the functions of the Executive Committee. If you wish to participate actively in Q.S.S.A. let your interests be known.

Regular meetings are held each Tuesday afternoon at 4:00pm in the Macintosh-Cory building, plan to attend some of these meetings.

Convocation

Earning a degree by part-time study is a long struggle - a struggle demanding sacrifices. In many cases these sacrifices have been made by family members as well as by the student. Very often more than one person has earned a degree with wives or husbands having been in the background giving moral and material support. Few of us achieve the worthwhile things of this life alone. Usually our achievements are in concert with family or friends.

Attending a Convocation ceremony is an opportunity for those who participate closely in your life to be very proud of what you and they have achieved. As a large number of part-time students will be completing their degrees this summer, the suggestion has been put forth that there be a special reception at the November convocation for Summer Students. The Fall Convocation will take place Saturday, November 1. Keep this date in mind as Convocation is an experience that comes only once.

Table Tennis Tourney

A table tennis tournament will be held in the basement of Chown Hall Thursday, July 31st. There will be a prize for Men's Singles, Men's Doubles, Women's Singles, Women's Doubles, and mixed Doubles. To be eligible contestants must be there by 6:30pm so that the schedule can be arranged. Equipment will be supplied.

Summer good times for many, many years

The evening cruise of the Thousand Islands has been a part of a great number of summers for students at Queen's. The cruise is the social highlight for many and this year's excursion met with great success. Over 300 partying people paraded aboard the boat. A happy mood spread through the boat and out over the waves. The live dance band added to the festivities.

All who were witnesses enjoyed Pat's attempt at flag-pole sitting (except possibly some member of the crew).

The picture below is taken from the 1924 Queen's Summer School Association publication. Even then the cruise was important feature of the summer fun.

The newest adventure film to hit North America by storm is Jaws which in recent weeks has taken a lot of news coverage. Time Magazine ran a five page story on it, as well as the general nature of sharks. The Globe and Mail ran a front page story on the dangers of shark attack in some of the well known resort areas frequented by sharks and tourists. Already the movie, adapted from Peter Benchley's best selling novel, has taken the lead in grossing more money than any other movie in history in its first week of operation (36 million on the whole in North America.)

Directed by Steven Spielberg, a relatively new and young face to the major feature presentation, the movie is the newest of the big budget suspense thrillers that are dominating the feature film market today. The main characters chief Brody (Roy Scheider), the New York city cop who has come to make a difference; Matt Hooper (Richard Dreyfuss) the expert from the Oceanographic Institute, whose pet peeve is the shark; and Quint (Robert Shaw) the professional Shark killer, spend their time fighting the menace of a killer shark of monstrous proportions which is terrorizing the resort community of Amity.

Spielberg has managed to keep an extremely fast pace throughout the movie which maintains the atmosphere of suspense. Adapting Benchley's rather mediocre novel, which seeks to combine Melville's classical Moby Dick with Arthur Hailey sensationalism, (Airport, Hotel, Wheels etc.) a lot of the excess baggage has been eliminated. The result is a first rate suspense movie.

The main concentration of the movie both mentally and perceptually is the shark. Throughout, the audience is hit with the silent mauler of the deep, the perfect "eating machine" who only "swims, eats and makes little sharks." Richard Dreyfuss is the only member of the trio of leading characters who seems to add a sense of personality to the movie, the only character who doesn't seem to overshadow himself. Nonetheless, each of the leading characters is presented with human characteristics, human faults; the only super hero is the shark!

For those skeptics of the big money movies and the attempt to overshadow the plot with extravagant sets and photography, may I suggest that this one movie that doesn't combine these characteristics, if you don't see it twice.

Capt. Downey at the wheel

Delta Lady

The strains of "Oh Suzanna" sound off in the distance, and the Island Queen, the newest cruise boat in the Thousand Islands area casts off. At her helm is Capt. W. R. Downey, one of the old style river captains of the St. Lawrence Seaway System, and one of the best men ever to guide a ship through the Thousand Islands' many channels. It seems only fitting that this particular man be in command, since the Island Queen is no ordinary cruise boat. The Island Queen is a throwback to the time when a cruise down a river was something special, when a cruise down a river was done with grace and in style; the Island Queen is a memory of good times and a lost elegance; the Island Queen is a paddle-wheeler of the Mississippi River family of paddle-wheelers.

Every day at "oh-nine thirty and fourteen hundred" and Thursdays to Saturdays at "twenty hundred" the Island Queen sets off on a four hour cruise through the Lake Fleet Island Group and the Admiralty Island Group of the Thousand Islands. The city of Clayton, New York comes into view soon after the international border is crossed, and the town of Gananoque is seen through the Admiralty Islands. At night, the route is altered somewhat, but to compensate for the change in route, a fully licensed bar is opened and a band supplies the sounds for Kingston's only floating dance floor.

Around midnight, the lights of Kingston appear around the bend at Cedar Point. During the day, hot food and cold soft drinks are available from behind the bar.

Owned and operated by Kingston and the Island Boatlines, the Island Queen was built by Marlin Yachts Ltd. in Sumnerstown, just east of Cornwall, and has some impressive vital statistics. Ninety feet long, twenty-nine feet wide and forty-five feet high, she's powered by two 400 horsepower diesel engines and can carry some 250 passengers. Her top speed is over thirteen miles (statutory) per hour and the hydraulic systems are checked out daily.

The skipper, Capt. Downey, and both mates, Capt. Hogan and Bradshaw are all veteran sailors of the Thousand Islands and can handle the Queen as if she were an automatic Volkswagen.

The price for the cruises, day or night, is five dollars per adult, two fifty for children and charters can be arranged by calling 546-2233. Further information is available at either the above number, or at 546-2232.

CORK '75

Olympic rehearsal

CORK (Canadian Olympic-training Regatta Kingston) has been an annual summer event since 1969. It is designed to attract international competition as an aid in the development of young Canadian sailors. In the past, CORK has been run by the Kingston Yacht Club and the Canadian Yachting Association.

The regatta, which runs this year for 9 days (July 18-27) has become the largest sailing event of its kind to be held in North America.

With the Olympic sailing events to be held in Kingston next summer, CORK '75 has become a sort of "dress rehearsal" for those events. As a result, it is being held in late July, which is the time next year's sailing Olympics will take place, and entries are being restricted to boat classes named by the International Yacht Racing Union for use at the 1976 Olympic Games. (Finn, 470, Flying Dutchman, Tempest, Soling and Tornado). The races are being run in the same course areas as those to be used next year. These are located seven miles from the Olympic Yachting Centre still under construction at Portsmouth Harbour.

As a test for their preparations for next year, CORK '75 is being organized by COJO Kingston (Comité Organisateur des Jeux Olympiques) under the direction of Cam Jones, who is on leave from his position as Queen's director of Physical Plant. Many members of the Kingston Yacht Club responsible for organizing CORK in past years have joined COJO Kingston.

As it is on an Olympic scale, the job of organizing CORK has been immense. Approximately 800 team members representing over 300 boats and 30 countries have arrived in Kingston for the week's events. Security and press arrangements are also on an Olympic scale, and over 1,000 competitors, press, RCMP and OPP officers have had to be housed and fed in Leonard Field residences and at West Campus. VIPs are being accommodated at the Donald Gordon Centre on Union St.

Security arrangements are stringent, with only people with passes being admitted into the restricted and fenced-off areas. Sealing off access to the water area are OPP and RCMP patrol boats. Rescue vessels are being provided by the Canadian navy.

As for all Olympic events, a hostess programme has been instituted for the yachting events. The hostesses have the job of helping competitors, accompanying VIPs on spectator boats, giving out information and offering language assistance.

Pogey may not pay

OTTAWA (CUP) You've been working and paying Unemployment Insurance premiums all summer. You get laid off or fired a month or so before school reopens.

So you decide to go down to the UIC office, apply for benefits, wait the standard two weeks, and get a couple of UIC cheques before classes resume.

Good idea? Definitely not.

The student who has worked more than 8 weeks over the summer and paid UIC premiums is eligible for up to 26 of benefits.

But the 26 week period begins as soon as the first UIC cheque is received, and just because you return to school and are ineligible for payment doesn't mean the UIC clock stops ticking.

By next spring, when summer unemployment may be an unavoidable fact, the student's claim period will have expired and eligibility for benefits withdrawn. The 26 weeks will have been used up, even though no payments were received.

This information on the workings of the Unemployment Insurance regulations, confirmed by UIC in Ottawa, comes from Wilfred Duffield of the United Auto Workers in Oshawa.

In a letter to Don Nicholls of the AUW Credit Union in Oshawa, Duffield says that "university students who work during the summer recess have been victims of their lack of knowledge of the Unemployment Insurance regulations pertaining to eligibility for benefits."

Stating that "it is obvious (students) are in need of advice as to how to legally take advantage of the Unemployment Insurance regulations in order to get the most out of the contributions they make while working," Duffield gives the following advice to students whose jobs terminate late in the summer.

In April, students would still be eligible for benefits, would serve the two-week waiting period, and would be eligible to draw up to 26 weeks of benefits, enabling students to collect until classes resume in the event they were unable to find employment.

One other important piece of advice from Duffield. If the student has already applied for short-term benefits at the end of the summer and is serving the two-week waiting period, the claim may be withdrawn and renewed later. However, if a single week of benefits is received, that claim cannot be cancelled and will not be renewable the following April.

Instructional development projects get $32,600

Four projects to enrich the learning process at Queen's University have been granted $32,600 in total from the Ontario Universities Program for Instructional Development. These are among 23 such grants given to universities across the province for 1975-76.

The program was established in 1973 under the auspices of the then Joint Committee on Instructional Development of the Committee on University Affairs (which has been replaced by the Ontario Council on University Affairs) and the Council of Ontario Universities. Its purpose is "to assist individual faculty members on Ontario universities, and the universities themselves in improving the effectiveness and efficiency of their instructional processes."

Dr. Colin J. Norman of the Department of English has received $6,000 to study the literacy of students in Queen's faculty of arts and science in order to assess whether there is a need for remedial courses in the English language. With the help of surveys and interviews with students and professors, Dr. Norman will gather facts about university student literacy as it now stands. He also hopes to assess the language proficiency of students about to graduate, compared to those starting out from high school.

Dr. Malcolm Griffin and Dr. Terry Smith of the Department of Mathematics are preparing a new introductory course in statistics with a grant of $10,000 from the program. They plan to present students with real life applications of statistics, and to give them a greater amount of independent work in order to explore data and make their own conclusions from it.

A grant of $16,000 will support the development of a course in Biology which can be learned in any classroom across Canada or in individual learning situations. Dr. Rudolf Harmsen of Queen's Biology Department will work with Dr. D.R. Lindsay of Lakehead University's Biology Department on this project. While the method could be applied to a course in any discipline, the Biology course will concentrate on the theories of the development and actions of the living world, using in the laboratory as many living specimens as possible.

The fourth grant to Queen's is for Dr. Brian B. Hope of the Department of Civil Engineering. Dr. Hope is using his $600 grant to travel to Britain to learn about the approach taken by British universities in avoiding duplication of graduate engineering courses.

Friday, August 8, 8:00 — A rally in defense of Spanish political prisoners will be held in Dupuis Hall. Terry Berrel of the Ad Hoc Committee to Save Spanish Prisoners in Toronto, will be the key speaker. The rally is specifically for the defense of prisoners: Eva Forest (Psychiatrist-Feminist), Maria Fernandez (Political Activist), Jose Antonio Garmendia (Basque Nationalist Militant) and Angel Otaeque (Political Activist) whose trials are now in progress for trumped up charges of assassination. Sponsors of this meeting are the Ad Hoc Committee to Save Spanish Political Prisoners, Amnesty International, Kingston, The Revolutionary Marxist Group and The Kingston Socialists.

Dear Mr. Wilson . . .

Dear Editors:

We were most entertained to observe the jading of John D. Wilson's political views in the seven years of his long political life. He is disillusioned, he says, with "the poverty of hope in Canadian politics at this time" and with what he more than implies is a cynical government in Ontario. It's amazing, indeed, to learn that Mr. Wilson, of all people, is privy to the innermost thoughts of Ontario Conservatives. What right do you have, Mr. Wilson, to ascribe unspoken motives to other people and then print your characterizations about them without any evidence whatsoever?

One reason why the Progressive Conservatives have formed the government in Ontario for over thirty years is that they have, like all effective and representative parties in democratic political systems, remained sensitive to the social concerns of the electorate. The party and the governments it formed have certainly not been perfect—but they have been imaginative and even anticipative enough to conduct the province through the difficult transition from agrarian to industrial to post-industrial society. (Meanwhile, as Jonathan Manhorpe, no friend of the Davis government, points out, the Liberals spent most of their time in internecine feuds and petty politicking).

We are in the post-industrial era now, and its concerns with the quality of life are here to stay. The decision to halt the Spadina expressway (a decision you say that you endorsed, Mr. Wilson, even though the Liberals did not) was but one of many enlightened and politically risky responses on the part of the so-called insensitive and expedient Davis government to problems threatening the environment. Creation of green-belts in large urban areas, aggressive programs to clean up water and air pollution, and prohibition of further construction of pollution-inducing sewage disposal systems in the cottage country are other examples.

At the same time, Ontario is not immune to world-wide economic trends, and such a concerned man as yourself, Mr. Wilson, should realize that lately there has been serious unemployment in the automobile industry. Recent experience in the U.S. has indicated that short-term cash rebates for automobile purchasers significantly increase employment. Shall we be "non-creative" Mr. Wilson, and allow lower and middle income-workers to remain unemployed?

By the way, the Liberals finally got around to holding a policy conference - in February of this year. Bob Nixon distinguished himself there by stressing two points: policy henceforth would be determined by him, not by the party members or even the convention delegates (Toronto Globe and Mail, February 11, 1975), and the next campaign would concentrate on personal attacks on Premier Davis, not on issues (Toronto Sun, February 11, 1975).

Well, Mr. Wilson, this is the kind of undemocratic, expedient leadership the Liberals offer as an alternative. And the NDP cannot hope to take the election this time around. Anyway, you confess in your article that "I can't see Robert Nixon or Stephen Lewis as being any better." So unless you can offer something other than a whining, unsubstantiated denunciation of Progressive Conservatives, Liberals, and New Democrats alike, we respectfully suggest that you keep your Olympian pronouncements off the printed page.

Seniors will be alert, not old fools

Dear Editors:

On page 3 of the July 24 Journal, you commented on the Board of Trustees' decision to grant senior citizens free tuition. I'm sure you meant the article and cartoon to be funny, but both fell sadly short of the mark. In fact, the article verges on being insulting and seems to say that the view expressed is the general view of Queen's students towards senior citizens. I'm surprised that such a blatant stereotype can exist in the minds of "educated" and "aware" young people.

Have you not stopped to think of the advantages of having older (and more mature) persons on campus and in our classrooms?—the wit, the different outlook, the reservoir of experience, the sense of past and future. The senior citizens who will take advantage of this generous offer will certainly be vital, mentally-alert people—not the doddering old fools you make them out to be. And what they have to offer and to share will not necessarily be restricted to the classroom. I've met people who, at 60 or 70, are more total, alive and satisfied people, than many of my contemporaries are. The admission of a greater number of senior citizens to our University will certainly bring changes, but I think they will be changes for the better. Instead of seeing it all as a joke, let's take it seriously. Your article has not only hurt the image of our senior citizens but has also hurt your image—ideas like yours belong in the minds of immature children.

Ridicule and contempt...for humour?

Dear Editors:

With reference to your editorial "We Can't Help Smiling," I was angered by your attitude toward the senior citizens who have been offered free tuition to study at Queen's.

Your initial support for the idea was immediately destroyed by a series of insults, making these prospective students the objects of contempt and ridicule, all in the name of "humour."

It no doubt will take a great deal of courage for some senior citizens to come and study at Queen's, especially if they see the scorn and derision to which they may be subjected should they decide to come.

I know several people in that age group whose presence in Queen's classes would be a wonderful asset. One, at age 68, has covered Europe several times, alone, with a pack on her back. Another, 83, danced and talked till midnight at a recent party and was still going strong. A third, at 94, is right up to date on current affairs and writes beautiful letters.

This may surprise you, but people over age 65 don't immediately revert to eating mush and going to bed at 7:30.

They deserve a much warmer welcome than you have offered.

Going abroad? watch yourself

By Robert McKeown
Ottawa Journal
Dec. 28, 1974

Robert McKeown is a veteran writer in the Ottawa bureau of The Journal's Weekend Magazine.

It is an axiom at the bureau of consular services in Ottawa that anything that can happen to travelling Canadians probably will. For example:

A visitor to Florida who decides he has absorbed too much sun, rushes to a drug store and gets a bottle of suntan lotion. He is going through the line-up at the cash register when he collapses from sunstroke. The store owner thinks this is a ruse to avoid paying the bill and calls the police. The Canadian lands in jail.

A man lends his car to the wife from whom he has separated and she goes driving in Europe. She is stopped by police who discover drugs in the car. She swears she has no knowledge of how the narcotics got there, but is imprisoned just the same.

An attractive Canadian woman manages to run up a hotel bill she can't pay of more than $2,000 in Las Palmas, Canary Islands, and is lodged in jail. Later it is discovered that there is no civil or criminal charge to cover the situation and she is released - after having been imprisoned for seven months.

Canadians, as this recital of woes suggests, are managing to get themselves into trouble on a global scale. When they do, as in all the cases above, they usually wind up on the doorstep of a Canadian embassy or consulate looking for help.

many helped

Last year diplomatic officials provided assistance to some 200,000 travelling Canadians and the number will probably be 300,000 this year. While most of the requests are trivial - like that of the man who solicited the personal help of the Canadian ambassador in Washington when his suitcase went missing - there is a mounting number of serious ones. On any given day upwards of 200 Canadians are known to be languishing in the jails of foreign countries, not including the United States.

While Canadians may not go looking for trouble more than anyone else, to consular officials they sometimes appear to do so. They have their pockets picked and their purses snatched. They lose their passports, plane tickets and travellers' cheques. They fall victim to foreign confidence men and alien bacteria. And with increasing frequency they try to smuggle narcotics across national boundaries.

"It used to be that we thought of these narcotics cases as unusual individual problems," said John G. Hadwen, director general of the bureau of consular services in Ottawa. "Now we take them as sad but constant facts of life."

Part of the trouble is that more Canadians than ever before are travelling to faraway places. The number of passports issued annually doubled between 1967 and 1973. The total now is over 2,350,000; about 1,300,000 of these are being used each year for travel beyond the United States. And the total number of individual crossings by Canadians of the Canada-United States border is 38,000,000 - almost twice the Canadian population.

"But the problem cases are increasing even faster than the number of passports," said Hadwen.

So fast, in fact, that the External Affairs Department has beefed up its consular staff with more bodies. The total consular staff in the field numbers 493, or about 12 per cent of External's labor force abroad.

Considered once to be a "silent service," the consular bureau now takes every opportunity to tell its story. A thick file of letters of praise for assistance rendered, provides evidence that it has many satisfied customers.

money violation

The variety in this work is boundless. Word comes from Eastern Europe that an elderly Canadian woman is in deep trouble over a foreign exchange violation.

She had sold her house in Western Canada and decided to take the money in cash and give it to a niece living in a Communist country. She had tied it in a bundle around her waist, but it had been discovered.

The body of a man who has been stabbed to death is found on a Mediterranean beach and he had been identified as being Canadian. About the same time a woman in Canada asks for help in finding her son whose letters have stopped coming. They prove to be the same person.

A spectrum of humanity seeks help at Canadian offices abroad. There are con-man types trying to get money on various pretexts; Canadians on their financial uppers who want assistance while refusing to approach their families; mental patients who turn up far from home with only hazy explanations of how they got there.

dual nationality

Among the trickiest cases the consular people have to handle are those involving dual nationality. Many Canadians are still regarded as nationals by the countries of their birth. Unless they renounce their original nationality after they become Canadians, they remain citizens of two countries.

In practically every European country which has universal military service, Canadians who are dual nationals may be conscripted on entering the country. In most countries there is nothing that can be done to help once a youth is in uniform. In Greece it is possible under certain circumstances for his family to buy him out at a cost of between $200 and $300. In Athens the Canadian Embassy handles between five and 10 such cases a week.

The consular officials find it difficult to get across the idea that Canadians have no special privileges under the laws of other countries. They stress that their own efforts must be directed to assuring that, as a minimum, those who seek their help get fair treatment under the foreign laws.

Consular officials say they go beyond this in various ways. They help to get lawyers for people charged with crimes. They get in touch with families if requested to do so and let those at home in Canada know what is happening.

But how much help and sympathy does a probable drug trafficker deserve? This is a delicate question for the consular staffs to answer. The practice is not to prejudice the cases but to do what is possible for the accused.

Some Canadians believe that because our law is relatively lenient in the matter of possession of drugs for personal use, they are within their rights if they carry a little marijuana or hashish along on their travels. But many countries make little distinction between possession and trafficking. An offence which might draw a fine in Canada, may bring a lengthy term in a jail whose conditions come as a shock to Canadians. Of the Canadians known to be in jail in foreign lands other than the United States, more than half are there for drug-related offences. On Oct. 30 last the number was 127 of the 207 in jail.

There are many others about whom the consular people never hear. Some may not want their families to know they are in trouble. Or they may not want to have the stigma of a criminal record when they get back to Canada. Others may be traffickers with friends in the racket who will look after them.

Several countries have established solid reputations as those in which Canadians are most likely to get into trouble over drugs. By common agreement Mexico tops the list, with Morocco, Spain, Afghanistan and India as runners-up.

Naivety, foolhardiness, stupidity, and plain criminality are all causes of the Canadian difficulties with drugs abroad. Young people doing the world on a shoestring hear of someone who has made a fortune by carrying drugs from Morocco, Colombia or Afghanistan, where they are readily available, to some other country. They are tempted to do the same and get caught. Others are gullible enough to carry suitcases across borders for "friends" they have made and these turn out to contain narcotics.

drug sellers

Many of the drug sellers work both sides of the street by selling to young travellers and then acting as police informers. In Mexico and elsewhere there are shakedown rackets aimed at extracting bribes from people who look susceptible.

The newly-arrived travellers will not have had time to settle into their motel room when the police charge in. They head straight for the refrigerator where they find a package of drugs.

The tourists' car stops at a red light and a man asks if the occupants would like to buy some hashish or marijuana. If they say, "No," he drops a package into the car and runs. A moment later the police stop the car and find the package.

Early this year two young Canadians driving in Morocco, picked up a Moroccan hitch-hiker carrying a pack sack. A short time later police stopped the car and searched it.

In the hitch-hiker's pack the police found a package which they said contained three kilograms of hashish. The Canadians were imprisoned and charged several days later with the possession of drugs. They were released after four weeks imprisonment on payment of a fine of $800.

baby in the cell

Many countries have no provision for bail, the laying of charges within a specified time, or even the informing of next-of-kin or the Canadian consul that a person is being held. Some Canadians have lived in crowded unsanitary jails for more than a year before charges were laid against them. Such situations are fully in accordance with local laws and there is little anyone can do for the accused persons.

A Canadian girl who was charged with drug possession when she entered Spain in the company of a friend was later convicted and sentenced to three years. She was pregnant at the time of her arrest and her baby was born in prison and lived with her in a cell. Members of the Canadian Embassy staff in Madrid did what they could to brighten the lives of mother and child, and she was finally released after two years.

To young Canadians tempted to carry drugs while abroad, the advice the consular service is, "Don't!" They have the stories and statistics to prove that the risks are great and the consequences of being caught are disastrous.

how to avoid trouble

Make sure you have the right visas and travel documents by consulting the local embassy of the country you are visiting.

Don't carry passport, money and travellers cheques in the one purse, pocketbook or coat, to protect against losing all of them together.

Take your birth certificate or citizenship certificate on your travels but keep it separate from your passport. With one of these documents you can with less difficulty get a new passport if the old one is lost or stolen. You can apply for another, if necessary, at the nearest Canadian consular office abroad.

Don't carry anything across a border for anyone you don't know well, even a little old lady. Let her get a porter. You could easily land in jail on a drugs or smuggling charge.

Check with the department of external affairs if the country or region you are visiting is in turmoil.

President Gary Pettigrew then read a letter from Ross Wardle which expressed his regret in being unable to attend this meeting and offered his congratulations and best wishes to the Summer School Executive and student body. (Appendix No. 7)

Gary then read the following Report from summer school. The summer of 1973 marked the first major changes in the QUASSA in many years. Through proposals made at the Annual Meeting of 1973 and new business involving the executive of 1974 the following ideas and proposals have been implemented.

1. The desired autonomy of Summer School has been preserved.

2. Good communications and co-operation between the A.M.S. and Summer School has been established.

3. Where practical QUASSA students will be given preference to act as A.M.S. constables at QUASSA events.

4. The Summer School of English students will pay the Student Interest Fee in 1975 as do all regular members of our association.

5. An agreement between Vice Principal Bonham, the A.M.S. and QUASSA regarding the $1.90 member social fee was established to preserve the credibility of our association.

Gary Pettigrew then gave a report on Summer School Prizes and Bursaries. He informed those present that there were three bursaries given this year. The announcement of the winner of the Curtis Memorial Award was made. Jeff Young was recipient of the Award this year.

Motion No. 13: moved by Steve Gilchrist, seconded by Lee Ewles that the meeting be adjourned at 9 p.m. Passed.

Comment

Over the past six weeks the Executive of QSSA has been under fire from a certain sector of the student body in regard to the organization and administration of the Summer School Association and its events. While I do thank these people for their interest and concern, I do have a few questions to raise.

1) Why will you not offer your services to the Executive to improve these so-called "shoddy" conditions?

2) Why did you not attend the Annual Meeting of the Summer School Association and make your feeling known to the whole body instead of one or two Executive Members?

3) Did you read the hand-out provided at Registration for your information?

4) Would you submit an article to the Journal explaining your point of view?

If your answer is "no" to one or more of these questions, then I suggest that you are coping out.

The people on the Executive of Summer School volunteer their services and seek no recognition for the hours of time spent running back and forth trying to sort out bureaucratic paraphernalia entailed in providing some events for the Summer School Student. They, like you, are attempting to complete two full courses in a short six-week stint. Therefore, I think criticism should be carefully doled out and you should be willing to back it up with some positive action.

The enclosed picture taken at the annual meeting certainly does not represent the deep concerns of Summer School Students. Perhaps this interest could better be termed as "apathy." I hope this is not indicative of years to come.

Minutes

Time and Place: 4:00 p.m., Mackintosh-Curry Hall

Members Present: Linda Chandler, Lee Ewles, Les Robertson, Karen Bradley, Kathy Murphy, Marg Pammett, Tony Burger, Bob Hawley, George Fowle, Wilt Morris, Marlene Hughes, Gary Pettigrew, Barry Boal, Ross Wardle.

Treasurer's Report: We have a balance of $1,210.51 with a debt for $385.00 for the 7 buses and the cost of the boat and beer for our dance.

Motion No. 2: moved by George Fowle, seconded by Gary Pettigrew that the treasurer's report be accepted as read. Passed.

Social Report: Once again the boat cruise was a "whale" of a success this summer with 319 of us participating. Cost for the seven buses was $385.00 and we have yet to receive the bill for the boat.

Tonight's dance at Grant Hall will be from 8:00 - 1:00 a.m. Due to the fact that the permanent liquor license for Grant Hall has not come through yet we will have to run this dance and the Beer Bash next Wednesday, July 23rd, 1975. Beer will be 4 for $2.00.

Sports: We now have a full gymnasium for our activities.

Inter-Relations: Kathy has the Questionnaire ready for printing. The question regarding the Directory will be left on the questionnaire but the cost of such a publication should be included for the benefit of the student body. Also we are looking into the possibility of publishing in the Journal.

McArthur: Bob Hawley reported that the food on West Campus is somewhat less than desirable. Also, there were no Journals distributed to McArthur.

Lee is meeting Mr. McGrath July 16th, 1975 and is hoping to discuss accommodations for next summer.

This summer all five bursaries were awarded.

A letter will be sent to Mr. Banister requesting information regarding the amount Q.S.S.A. will have to add to our existing fund in order to raise each bursary to $120.00 to cover the cost of one course.

Fall convocation will be November 1st, 1975.

Bill Fitches and Adrian Willey are to be asked to be Nominating Committee Co-Chairmen for our elections. We will be reviewing our constitution at our meeting on Tuesday, July 22nd.

Motion No. 3: moved by Les Robertson, seconded by Linda Chandler that the meeting be adjourned at 4:40 p.m. Passed.

Motion No. 1: moved by Barry Boal, seconded by Kathy Murphy that the secretary's minutes be accepted as read. Passed.

Yesteryear

The following is taken from the 1924 issue of the Summer School Association Publication:

...may I presume a word to the students who may attend in 1925? When your officers call a meeting of the Association put aside your personal affairs and be at that meeting without fail. If the pioneer workers of the Summer School desire any reward it is this, that the spirit of the founders may be carried on. If you become careless and make the Summer School a plugging school; if you are selfish, thinking only of your affairs; if you are not watchful for its future, and the students to come, then all their work has been in vain.

It is the meeting of the hundred other good fellows from Vancouver to Halifax, learning their problems and discussing your difficulties, just as much as the passing of examinations, that makes the Summer School such an addition to your intellectual life.

So get out to the meetings, get up and discuss the questions (they are your business), take part in all the activities, play tennis, bowl on the green, stroll in the park, or go boating on the St. Lawrence. Your brain will then be in a condition for lectures and close study, and you will be a real member of Queen's Summer School Association. (Originally written by T.W. Oates, of London, Ont.)

Q.S.S.A. MEETING: JULY 22, 1975

9 p.m. CHOWN HALL

Members Present: Bob Hawley, George Fowle, Kathy Murphy, Tony Burger, Marg Pammett, Linda Chandler, Lee Ewles, Les Robertson, Gary Pettigrew, Alison Bell, Barry Boal and Karen Bradley.

Motion No. 1: moved by Tony Burger seconded by Kathy Murphy that the secretary's minutes from July 15 be accepted as read. Passed.

Treasurer's Report: We have a balance of $1,294.57 with outstanding debts for the Buses, Boats, A.M.S. and Ice.

Motion, No. 2: moved by Bob Hawley seconded by Alison Bell that the treasurer's report be accepted as read. Passed.

Social Report:

The dance on July 15 was very successful and Alison Bell and Linda Chandler expressed their thanks to the A.M.S. constables who were on duty that night.

Brian Thrasher and The Mission will provide the music for our dance at Grant Hall on July 23, 1975. The beer will be $6.00 or 4 for $2.00.

Our Annual Meeting will be in Lower Victoria on Wed. July 30.

Inter-Relations:

The cost of running a printout in the Journal rather than a Directory would be approximately $200.00 to $250.00. Hopefully the Questionnaires will be out next week.

In meeting with Mr. McGrath and Mrs. Trum Lee was assured that the Summer School Students receive equal consideration in regards to residence etc. As of yet no definite decision has been made as to our place of residence for next summer. This cannot be decided until numbers are known.

New Business:

A list of proposed changes to the constitution was prepared to be voted on at the Annual Meeting, July 30.

The following people were named to the Curtis Memorial Committee:

Linda Chandler

Tony Burger

Gary Pettigrew

Kathy Murphy

Marg Pammett

Motion No. 3: moved by Alison Bell seconded by George Fowle that a letter be sent to Ian Fraser expressing our thanks to the helpful constables at the dance on July 15. Passed.

Motion No. 4: moved by Les Robertson seconded by Tony Burger that the meeting be adjourned at 9:50 p.m. Passed.

Our next meeting will be Wed. July 30, 1975 at 7:30 p.m. in Lower Victoria.

Experience electronic music

On Tuesday, August 12, 1975, in Harrison LeCaine Hall, The Queen's University Music Department will present an Evening of Electronic Music, comprised of an open house and a concert. The concert, beginning at 8:00 p.m. in room 120, features compositions by recent graduates of the B. Mus. programme, as well as works completed by students in this summer's course in electronic music. The concert will be given in a room equipped with a special system for quadrophonic (4 channel) playback of tape compositions. However, preceding the concert (between 7-8 p.m.) there will be an Open House, which will include both tours of the studio complex and actual demonstrations of equipment in each of the studios.

The Queen's University Electronic Music Studios (E.M.S.) was founded in 1970 by Professor David Keane. The original studio, located in Goodwin House, consisted of three tape recorders and several other items which were interconnected by loose patch cords. Then, for three years, the studio occupied several rooms of 82 Queen's Crescent. Much time was spent in eliminating interference from CFRG, CKLC FM, and the KGH paging system.

Installation of the Studio Complex in the new Harrison LeCaine Hall is all but complete. High quality and imaginative design and installation by the campus Electronic Service Shop, under Jack Harrison and Gary Racine, has made the Queen's Electronic Music Studios one of the finest in the country. Approximately $50,000 worth of equipment and over 1500 man-hours of assembly went into the present studio. The Studio now has 16 tape recorders, four mixers, three synthesizers, and a variety of specialized equipment like filters, reverberation units, modulators, oscillators, sequencers, and other sound generating and processing devices.

Under the direction of Professor Keane, the music Department now offers two basic courses in electronic music composition. The E.M.S. are used by approximately 60-70 students during the regular academic session, as well as by several professors in the Department. The Studios are also used in work done in collaboration with the Departments of Psychology, Physics, Computing Science, Art, Film, and Drama.

The Electronic Music Studios provide an interesting, impressive, and imaginative approach to music composition today. Tuesday's Open House and Concert will give visitors an educational experience in electronic music.

Four Musketeers a disappointment

by Michael Walker

The Four Musketeers, at the Hyland, is a mild disappointment. Its parent, The Three Musketeers, had been highly recommended. I accordingly resolved to see the offspring. The film is a comedy, with the musketeers involved in the intrigues of the French royal court. It depends in part on rather simple slapstick. There is, for example, a scene invoking a sword fight on ice, which will be a favourite amongst those who enjoy watching people slip on banana peels. There are also some very good incongruities and asides, which are quite quick and unfortunately, as they are rare, easily missed. The Cockney accents of the French peasants deliver the best lines. If you do go to see The Four Musketeers, ignore the weak plot and the major characters; the gems are to be found elsewhere.

National Ballet summer tour

The National Ballet of Canada opens its third annual summer season as guest company at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York this week. The company will be performing under the management of Hurok Concerts with Rudolf Nureyev as guest artist from July 22 through August 10.

The repertoire for the New York season is "The Sleeping Beauty," "Coppelia," "Swan Lake," "Don Juan," and "La Sylphide." "Coppelia," choreographed by Erik Bruhn, resident producer for the company made its debut last February during the National Ballet's spring season and subsequently played London and Holland on the company's recent European tour. The New York opening will be its U.S. premiere.

On return from New York, the company continues rehearsals in Toronto for its annual summer engagement at the Forum of Ontario Place August 19 to 23. The program at Ontario Place is "Les Sylphides" and "Offenbach in the Underworld" with performances nightly at 8:30 p.m. and matinees Thursday and Saturday at 3 p.m.

"Les Sylphides" produced by Celia Franca and Erik Bruhn joined the company's repertoire in 1973. "Offenbach" is the highly popular Antony Tudor work first presented by the company in 1964 and restaged this season by Celia Franca, acting artistic director.

Tickets to the ballet performances at Ontario Place are included in price of admission to the grounds.

98 students lose jobs by decision on UN conference

TORONTO (CUP) Some 98 Toronto students have become minor casualties of the federal decision to "postpone indefinitely" the UN Crime Conference in Toronto.

The 98 were to have worked at the event as interpreters and guides, and received letters last May confirming they would be hired for a five-week period in September at salaries ranging from $169 to $200 per week.

But after the government announced the postponement they were notified their jobs had been cancelled along with the September conference date, leaving at least some of the students without money for the upcoming academic year.

"It's a catastrophe," said the mother of one woman student hired for the conference.

"The thing is, the students knew they were going to be employed at the end of the summer and did other things. Now they're going back to school but they're not going to have any money."

George Hale, finance and administrative officer for the UN meeting, said in an interview from his Ottawa office he has "not given up hope for some kind of an arrangement" to compensate the students, but added he doesn't want to raise false hopes.

"Public money is not given away gratuitously, but we recognize some obligation on our part for those students effected in their summer planning."

He said that although consideration was being given for some form of compensation for the students, nothing definite could be promised.

Others who may have financially suffered as a result of the postponement, such as firms supplying goods and services which have already incurred expenses in planning for the conferences, would also have to be considered, he said.

OFS to emphasize issues for election

GUELPH (CUP) The Ontario Federation of Students wants to enumerate university students, faculty and staff for the Ontario provincial election expected for this fall.

OFS spokesperson, Chris Harries, said the enumeration, which OFS sees as it's major goal this fall, would be mostly done by students where possible and coordinated by OFS through local committees on each campus.

The local committees would arrange with the appropriate political parties to ensure students are allowed to do their own enumerating as they understand better the layout of the campuses and the timetable kept by students, Harries said.

Speaking after an OFS executive meeting held July 15 in Guelph, Harries said the committees would be responsible for a questionnaire prepared by OFS asking each candidate to respond to certain student concerns. These, he said, include housing, employment and education in general. The questionnaire would be sent to all students in Ontario.

The local committees would be the backbone of OFS election strategy, Harries said. "They will form part of the mechanism for conducting the campaign during the election."

Other OFS strategy outlined at the weekend meeting include:

- the distribution of pamphlets outlining OFS' stance for the election both for students and non-students.

- the displaying of posters highlighting the election issues with regards to higher learning.

- the publishing of a position paper focusing on the post-secondary education policies of the three main parties with special emphasis on the current government's record.

"The strategy which OFS will follow," said Harries, "is one that generalizes issues aimed at the general public and one that ensures that the major political parties can't run a cheap anti-intellectual campaign."

Some of OFS' demands include the abolition of tuition fees at Ontario's 15 universities and 22 community colleges and guaranteed living stipends for students.

OFS was created three years ago in response to decreased government funding to the university system. Now OFS represents 125,000 university and college students, each paying $1.50 per year to the organization.

NDP pledges free university access

WATERLOO (CUP) If the NDP ever formed a government in Ontario it would ensure there would be no barriers to those wanting to attend university, Waterloo North NDP candidate Jack Kersell said July 22.

For those unable to cope with the expenses of higher education, the NDP would provide living stipends and bursaries to qualified students, he said.

The NDP would also abolish tuition fees as a first step in guaranteeing universal accessibility to post-secondary institutions in the province.

"The poor and the working classes must be given a chance to break out of the cycle which denies them the opportunity of furthering their education," Kersell said.

The NDP plan will cost a great deal of money, like any social reform, and it must be accompanied by massive tax changes, Kersell warned.

These tax changes will involve increases in personal, corporation and resource taxes, Kersell said.

New TM "Forest Academy" to be built

The World Plan Executive Council of Canada which teaches the Science of Creative Intelligence (SCI) and the Transcendental Meditation (TM) programme announces the development of another "Forest Academy" in North America. This 108 room year round facility will be located 17 miles north of Kingston, Ontario and will be the 8th such "Forest Academy" to open in North America in the last 2 years. The facility will also be holding courses on the Science of Creative Intelligence (SCI) that have been developed specifically for government officials, businessmen and educators.
